SEC. 2. That in the interest of the national defense and for the performance of the public services hereinafter specified, after July 1, 1907, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, subject to the provisions of this act, out of any money in the Treasury to be annually appropriated therefor upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates to the owner or owners of any steam vessel of over 1,000 gross tons, and of any sail vessel of over 200 gross tons, and fishing vessel of over 20 gross tons hereafter built and registered in the United States or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), engaged exclusively as a common carrier for the service of the public, subventions as hereinafter provided; that is to say, (a) the sum of $5 per gross registered ton for each vessel which has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of twelve months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed two months in making annual or extraordinary repairs; (b) the sum of $4 per gross registered ton for each vessel which, during any twelve consecutive months, has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of nine months or over, but less than twelve months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs; (c) the sum of $2.50 per gross registered ton for each vessel which during any twelve consecutive months has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of six months or over, but less than nine months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs.

The subventions provided for in this section shall not be paid to:

(a) A vessel for a voyage on which the principal part in bulk of her cargo shall have been transported from one port of the United States to another port of the United States, as provided in section 4347 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the acts of February 15, 1893, and February 17, 1898.

(b) A vessel while exclusively employed in carrying between foreign ports.

(c) A vessel for a voyage extending only to a foreign port less than 150 nautical miles from her last port of departure in the United States, or from a foreign port less than 150 nautical miles from her first port of arrival in the United States.

Sections 1 and 2 of an act approved April 15, 1904, entitled "An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes." shall not take effect until July 1, 1909, and until that date a vessel of the United States employed in trade between the United States and the Philippines shall receive for the period of its employment in such trade an additional subvention of 30 per cent of the rates provided in this section. After that date a vessel of the United States so engaged shall receive no subvention under this section.

A vessel receiving a subvention under this section shall not receive any other subvention, subsidy, or bounty from the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 3. That before receiving any subvention under the provisions of section 2 of this act the owner or owners of any vessel shall contract, in writing, with sufficient sureties, with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to fulfill each and all of the following obligations:

First. That said vessel may be taken and used by the United States, for the national defense or for any public purpose, at any time, upon payment to the owner or owners of the fair actual value of the same at the time of the taking, or a fair rate of hire to be agreed upon. And if there shall be a disagreement as to such fair actual value or fair rate of hire between the United States and the owner or owners of such vessel, the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to take the vessel at once, leaving the fair actual value or fair rate of hire to be determined thereafter by two impartial appraisers, one to be appointed by each of said parties, they to select a third, who shall act in such appraisement in case the two shall fail to agree, and the provisions of this subdivision shall be embodied in every contract between the vessel owner or owners and the United States.

Second. That said vessel shall carry, free of charge, the mails of the United States, when the Postmaster-General shall so require, for the whole or any part of a voyage for which subvention shall be claimed.

Third. That until July 1, 1912, upon each departure of said vessel from the United States at least one-sixth, and after July 1, 1912, one-fourth of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, or men who have declared their intention to become citizens, and of the navigating force on deck, excluding licensed officers, at least one-half shall be able seamen, who are hereby defined to be men who have had two years' or more experience on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes.

Fourth. That a vessel employed in the foreign trade shall maintain, during the period so employed, at least class A 1 if a steam vessel, and at least class A 1½ if a sail vessel, as such classes are now established by either the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit.

Fifth. That all ordinary repair or overhauling of said vessel shall be made in the United States, except in cases where dry docking is necessary and no American dry dock of sufficient capacity shall be within a distance of 500 miles of the location of the ship when the repairs shall be needed.

Sixth. A vessel shall not be entitled to the subvention above provided for unless during the period of employment in the foreign trade or deep-sea fisheries the following proportions of the crew of the vessel after the dates specified shall have been enrolled in the naval reserve: After July 1, 1908, one-eighth; after July 1, 1912, one-sixth; after July 1, 1917, one-fourth: Provided, That if the foregoing stated proportions of naval reserves can not be obtained at a foreign port with reasonable effort, as certified by the consul, other persons may be substituted until the first return of said vessel to the United States, without forfeiture of the subvention.

SEC. 4. That the contracts provided for in section 3 shall be for a period of one year, and shall be renewed from time to time. At the expiration of each annual contract the owner of the vessel shall be required to prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in such manner as the said Secretary shall prescribe, that its obligations, each and all, have been satisfactorily complied with. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall thereupon certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of subvention to which said owner shall be entitled in fulfillment of said contract and of the provisions of this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury upon proper audit shall thereupon pay the subvention due.

SEC. 5. That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to enter into contracts, for a term not less than five nor more than ten years in duration, with citizens of the United States for the carrying of mails on steamships hereafter built and registered in the United States, or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), between ports of the United States and ports on the routes and for the amounts prescribed in section 6 of this act. All the provisions of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," are hereby made applicable in all respects to the services provided for in section 6 of this act: Provided, That the specific rates of compensation provided for in section 5 of said act shall not apply to the services provided for in section 6 of this act, and that all ordinary repair or overhauling of a steamship employed and paid for carrying mails under sections 5 and 6 of this act shall be made in the United States, except in cases where dry docking is necessary and no American dry dock of sufficient capacity shall be within a distance of 500 miles of the location of the ship when the repairs shall be needed; and that such a steamship shall not, except as provided in section 6 of this act, receive any other subvention, subsidy, or bounty from the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 6. That as soon as may be practicable the Postmaster-General shall establish, in the manner prescribed in section 5, the following ocean mail services:

First. From a port of the Atlantic coast of the United States to Brazil, on steamships of the United States of not less than 14 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $150,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year.

Second. From a port of the Atlantic coast of the United States to Uruguay and Argentina, on steamships of the United States of not less than 14 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $187,500 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $375,000 a year.

Third. From a port of the Atlantic coast of the United States to South Africa, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $187,500 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $375,000 a year.

Fourth. From a port of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to Brazil, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $137,500 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $275,000 a year.

Fifth. From a port of the United States on the Atlantic coast, south of Cape Hatteras, and from a port on the Gulf of Mexico to Cuba, on steamships of the United States of not less than 14 knots speed, for a weekly service, at a maximum compensation not exceeding $75,000 a year, or for a semiweekly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $125,000 a year.

Sixth. From each of two ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico and from New Orleans to Central America and to the port of Cristobal on the Isthmus of Panama, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a weekly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $75,000 a year.

Seventh. From a port of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico to Mexico, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a weekly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $50,000 a year.

Eighth. From a port of the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii to Japan, China, and the Philippines, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $300,000 a year, or for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $600,000 a year.

Ninth. From each of the two ports, namely, Puget Sound and the Columbia River of the North Pacific coast of the United States to Japan, China, and the Philippines, on steamships of the United States of not less than 13 knots speed, for a monthly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $210,000 a year; or for a fortnightly service, at a maximum compensation not exceeding $420,000 a year.

Tenth. From a port of the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii and the Samoan Islands to Australasia, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a service once in three weeks at a maximum compensation not exceeding $217,000 a year in addition to the compensation now provided pursuant to contract under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce."

Eleventh. From a port of the Pacific coast of the United States to Mexico, Central America, and Port La Boca on the Isthmus of Panama, on steamships of the United States of not less than 12 knots speed, for a fortnightly service at a maximum compensation not exceeding $120,000 a year: Provided, That the requirements of this section as to the rates of speed shall be deemed to be complied with if said rates are developed during a trial of four hours' continuous steaming at sea in ordinary weather in water of sufficient depth to make the test a fair and just one, and if the vessels are maintained in a condition to develop such speed at any time while at sea in ordinary weather. This trial shall be made under the direction and supervision of a board of naval officers which the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint upon the application of the owner or owners of the vessel to be tested.

SEC. 7. That all contracts hereafter made pursuant to the act of March 3, 1891, before mentioned, or pursuant to sections 5 and 6 of this act, shall provide that on each voyage the following proportion of the crew shall be enrolled in the Naval Reserve: After July 1, 1908, one-eighth; after July 1, 1912, one-sixth; and after July 1, 1917, one-fourth: Provided, That if the foregoing stated proportions of naval reserves can not be obtained at a foreign port with reasonable effort, as certified by the consul, other persons may be substituted until the first return of said vessel to the United States, without forfeiture of the compensation.

SEC. 8. That on proof to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Navigation that a vessel of the United States has on any foreign voyage carried a boy or boys, a citizen or citizens of the United States, under 21 years of age, suitably trained during that voyage in seamanship or engineering, in the proportion of one for such vessel, and in addition one for each 1,000 tons of her net registered tonnage, there shall be paid to the owner or owners of the vessel, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an allowance equivalent to 80 per cent of the tonnage duties paid in respect of the entry in the United States of that vessel from that voyage: Provided, That such payment shall not be made after July 1, 1908, except in respect of any boy who is enrolled as seaman, third class, in the Naval Reserve, or is an apprentice indentured in accordance with law.

SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1906.

SEC. 10. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, in whole or in part, whenever in its judgment the public interest shall so require, without, however, impairing in any wise the obligation of any specific contract then in force which shall have been entered into under the provisions of sections 2, 3, 5, and 6 of this act.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FASSETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration carries the annual appropriation for the support of the Department of Agriculture. It is the only specific legislation by Congress in which the farmer has a direct interest. It is the sole contribution of the Government in aid of the greatest industry of the nation.

Agriculture has always been, and will continue to be, of supreme and first importance to all the nations of earth. It is the most ancient and important of all the professions. Upon it as a foundation the earliest civilization of the world rested, and it is to-day the bedrock of our national greatness.

If the student of the human family would get an accurate measure of its progress, he must first get a correct measure of the development of agriculture in the different periods to which his research is directed. The progress of the one is measured by the progress of the other. Such an investigation will prove that agriculture has always been, and will ever be, the basic industry of the world, supporting and vitalizing every other.

Everyone must recognize that upon the prosperity of the man who walks in the furrow, upon the happiness and comfort and well-being of "the man with the hoe," must depend the prosperity, happiness, and well-being of all classes and industries. Bountiful harvests to the farmer bring a wealth of prosperity to all other occupations. When disaster comes to him every other industry suffers; when he prospers, the nation likewise prospers. Whatever helps him helps the world, and vice versa. From his skill and energy, from his success in getting bountiful responses from nature, is drawn the lifeblood which, circulating through the arteries of every other industry, vitalizes them into agencies of happiness and wealth. He is the breath of life of all of the other occupations of mankind and the moving cause of every step forward in the march of progress. Upon him depends directly or indirectly every industry, and upon his broad shoulders rests the burden of feeding and clothing the world, while at the same time he is the chief customer for the products of all other industries. Back of all progress, back of every forward movement in the history of the world, stands this unpretentious man—earth's most modest, but best prince. [Applause.]

The statesmanship of every age has recognized the prime importance of agriculture and in some way undertaken to do justice to this most potent agency in the industrial development of the world.

The great Corsican, when in the very fullness of his power, with that almost inspired wisdom which marked his every act, wrote in the civil code of the French nation as a fundamental doctrine:

> First, agriculture, the soul and basis of the Empire; second, industry, the comfort and happiness of the population; third, trade, the superabundance and proper application of the surplus of agriculture and industry.

To the wisdom of this doctrine the French Republic owes, in a large measure, the industrial achievements which have given her place among the nations of earth.

Our own Department of Agriculture traces its origin to the practical wisdom of the "Father of his Country," and the active efforts of that wise old philosopher, Benjamin Franklin, the celebration of whose birthday we are about to make, and rightly, an occasion of national importance. In his last message to Congress President Washington, recognizing that a neglected agriculture meant ultimate ruin for his country, urged upon that body the importance of agriculture to the nation in these words:

> In proportion as nations advance in population, the cultivation of the soil becomes more and more the object of public patronage.

This strong, practical, patriotic old hero looked far into the future and with clear vision foresaw the important relationship that agriculture would bear to the progress and prosperity of the country to whose service he had given so many years of his life. He directed the attention of Congress to the necessity for the creation of some kind of governmental agency which should be charged with the duty of stimulating enterprise and experiment along agricultural lines and whose function it would be to collate these experiments and observations and disseminate them among the people. This is the kernel around which has grown our present efficient and valuable Department of Agriculture, a Department which affects more people and does better work within the limitations provided by the small appropriations for it than any Department of this Government, and I say this, not in disparagement of the efficiency of other Departments, but in justice to this, whose work I know is adding enormously to the happiness of the people and the wealth of the nation.

The suggestions of General Washington did not bring from Congress any affirmative legislative response, but at the same time they were met with favor by the wisest and best statesmanship of that period. It is interesting to know that the response of the Senate to these suggestions was written by a South Carolina, Senator Read. The truth is, from the very earliest days of the Republic the South has been vitally interested in every effort to better the condition of the agricultural classes, and to-day no section of the Union is more concerned in agriculture than the South, nor is there a section of the country which gives heartier support to the present administration of the Department of Agriculture, which has a firmer faith in its integrity or a greater confidence in its wisdom than the section from which I have the honor to come. We believe in Secretary Wilson the man; we believe in him as the friend of agriculture. We are more than satisfied that we can always get from him at least a square deal. His Department is doing a great work in the South in many ways, and I confidently expect from it a great revival in southern agriculture. If he can successfully demonstrate to our people the advantage of diversified agriculture over our present one-crop system, the result in that one undertaking will be a return in increased taxable property to the nation a hundredfold greater than the appropriation carried in this bill for the whole country.

Our Government is not an exception in extending aid to its agricultural classes. Every nation with any prominence in the affairs of the world assents to the idea of government aid for agriculture and makes annual appropriations to that end. Germany, France, Austria, Hungary, Spain, and even benighted Russia and young Japan expend large sums for conserving, promoting, and encouraging those of their people engaged in agriculture. The fact is that these nations evince a deeper concern in the welfare of their agricultural classes than we do in ours.

It may sound somewhat out of joint when I assert it, but the truth is that our Government was not only tardy in extending to this most potent agency in our industrial development that recognition to which its great importance to the country entitled it, but that even now, in this very year, when the crowded condition of our cities and the world's increasing demands for breadstuffs and clothing necessitates such a great increase in the productiveness of our farms, we are pursuing a policy with respect to this industry which almost amounts to parsimony. [Applause.]

The first affirmative legislative action looking to governmental aid for agriculture was not had until 1839, when the insignificant sum of $1,000 was appropriated to buy and distribute "rare and valuable seed" among the farmers. The appropriation was grudgingly increased from year to year as the demand for aid grew more and more insistent until under President Lincoln's first Administration the Department of Agriculture, with functions no greater than that of an ordinary bureau, was created. The Department did not receive that enthusiastic support and encouragement from Congress which were necessary to make it of any special consequence to the country. It was regarded rather as a "sop" to the farmer than the evidence of a serious intent to aid him. Little was expected from it, and little was received. It was not until 1889, one hundred years after the signing of the Constitution, when the nation began its real life, that any serious and purposeful effort to aid agriculture was undertaken by this Government. In that year an act was passed raising the Department of Agriculture from a bureau class to that of an Executive Department of the Government, with added duties and enlarged jurisdiction. This was the first time in our history of a hundred years that the farmer, as a class, was accredited a distinction to which he was entitled above every other class in the country if regard is to be had for the relative importance to the Government of the various classes and occupations in which our people are engaged. That this great industry should have been denied so long this consideration at the hands of the Government does not do credit for impartiality and fairness and patriotic foresight to the Congresses which have gone before us. [Applause.]

Be it said to the glory of the Democratic party that the present Department of Agriculture is the creation of Democratic wisdom. The burden of the fight for the American farmer was borne by a Missouri Democrat (Hatch) and the act was signed by a Democratic President, and from that day until this the Government has been committed most thoroughly to the policy of aiding agriculture, and the wonderful delevopment, the increased production, the enhanced value of farm property, and the general well-being and prosperity of the farmer bear convincing testimony to the fact that the appropriations for this purpose have not been wasted, but, on the contrary, have been seed sown in fertile soil. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, who is this man, and what has he done and is he doing to merit the consideration of the Government, even in so small a way as is shown in this annual appropriation act? Who is he that a representative of his calling should have a seat at the Cabinet table of the President with rank equal to that enjoyed by every other occupation? He is the unpretentious, unassuming citizen, who is not found constantly knocking at the doors of the American Congress for the loaves and fishes, nor crowding the lobbies of this Capitol, pleading and begging for special legislation in his own behalf. He brings more of support in the way of wealth and good citizenship to the Government than any other class, and in return asks less of it and gets less from it. He is the one man of all men who is unpampered, unpetted, unprotected by legislative favoritism. We find no Federal laws to protect him against honest competition, nor to enable him to feed upon the toil of others. Unaided by special enactment, he goes into the markets of the world, competes with every condition of labor everywhere, and conquers them through the merit of the products he offers for sale, and his sagacity as a trader. [Applause.]

He depends absolutely upon his own effort to win that success which comes to so many others through the special favor of the Government. He has in him all the elements which enter into the making of the highest type of citizenship, yet we do not find him laying claim to any special virtues, nor does he believe himself better than other men. He looks upon integrity of character as the true measure of men, and an abiding faith in the ultimate triumph of the institutions of his country as the true standard of patriotism. Honest labor he regards as the first duty of an American citizen, and work has no aversion for him. Sober-minded and earnest, he takes a serious view of life, and the dash and dazzle of things unreal do not appeal strongly to him. Law-abiding himself, he is quick to defend and uphold the majesty of the law, because he sees in the orderly conduct of affairs and men the real safety of the nation. [Applause.] For him lawlessness and idleness receive no sympathy. His contribution to the civic and political virtue of the country is perhaps greater than that of any other class, and he is to-day the great conservative force in American politics. [Applause.] And when the day shall come that the cherished institutions of our country are threatened by the rapidly rising tide of radicalism and unrest, when the fierce struggle between the forces of labor and capital shall begin in real earnest, when the day of chaos shall come, this American farmer, so unpretentious of his patriotism will stand as a rock of ages against the onrushing forces of political, social, and economic revolution and destruction. In such a day he will be the bulwark of civil and religious liberty—the Ark of the Covenant of our system of government. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I now desire to direct the attention of the House to the farmer's contribution to our national wealth, and to prove from the most reliable statistics that he not only contributes more to that wealth than does any other class, but at the same time correct the false impression that as a class he is wanting in business sagacity.

The statistician, Mulhall, in his Dictionary of Statistics, gives to the United States the first place among the nations in wealth. This very valuable publication makes the wealth of this country more than one and one-third times greater than that of Great Britain, about one and two-thirds greater than that of France, more than twice as great as that of Germany, almost three times as great as that of Russia, four times as great as that of Austria, and nearly twice as great as that of Italy and Spain combined. It is estimated that the aggregate wealth of this country to-day approximates the enormous total of $100,000,000,000, and this stupendous sum, too great for the comprehension of human intellect, is the result of only a little more than a century of national endeavor. It is a marvelous record for the youngest of the nations, and a splendid tribute to the productive genius of the American people. To this achievement all industries have contributed, but no single one has contributed to it even half so much as agriculture. [Applause.]

More than one-fifth, approximately $23,000,000,000 of the nation's wealth, must be credited to the brain and brawn, the productive capacity, and business ability of the farmer. Unaided by class legislation, without special favors from the Government, he has done more to swell the aggregate of national wealth than all the railroads and manufacturing establishments of the country combined, notwithstanding the fact that these two industries rank second and third in importance as wealth contributors.

By a few comparisons let us endeavor to get some conception of what $23,000,000,000, the amount invested in agriculture, means. All the gold and silver in coin and bullion in the United States makes but a mere bagatelle in comparison to this amount, and the combined banking power of the world, exclusive of the United States, is less than the capital invested in agricultural pursuits. The farmer, if he desired it, could buy every railroad in this country and still have a bank account of $10,000,000,000, a sum larger by $1,000,000,000 than the total capital invested in all the manufacturing establishments of the country.

Not only is agriculture the largest contributor to the wealth of the country, but it employs over 36 per cent of its total population engaged in productive and gainful occupation. According to the census of 1900, the farms in the United States numbered 5,739,000, and embraced an acreage of 841,201,546. Employed in the cultivation of this vast empire were approximately 10,500,000 persons, representing 36,000,000 of our total population. It is thus seen that over one-third of the people of this country are directly and vitally concerned, to say nothing of the vast millions indirectly interested, in everything that affects agriculture. The mind is too limited in its scope to grasp the full significance of these figures. If we should divide the total agricultural population by 5, we would have an army of over 7,000,000 men—an army greater in number than was ever marshaled even in the imagination of the wildest dreamer. [Applause.]

It is common to assert, and it has been reiterated so much until the statement has come to be accepted as a fact by those who do not know, that the farmer, as a class, is deficient in business ability, that he fails to measure up to the standard of the average citizen in productive capacity, and lacks genius for the accumulation of wealth. This belief is far from the truth, and I shall undertake to show it. In proportion to his opportunities, no class of our population has shown more skill and shrewdness in the management of his own affairs than has the farmer, and no class has collected a larger dividend from the capital invested than he. An examination of the records establishes this fact beyond a doubt and proves my contention that there is no more shrewd or capable business man on earth than the American farmer. What are the facts?

In 1850, a half century ago, the number of farms in this country was a little less than a million and a half. To-day there are more than five million and a half contributing their daily bounty to the nation's comfort and wealth. Fifty years ago there were in cultivation only 290,000,000 acres of land, as against the more than 841,000,000 acres in cultivation to-day.

In 1850 the total value of all farm property in the United States was less than $4,000,000,000. That capital has been increased by the business capacity of the farmer until to-day it exceeds the grand total of $23,000,000,000. This is the farmer's record as a business man. Within the memory of most of those who do me the honor to give their attention to this statement he has brought under his sovereign authority and subjected it to his will an empire from which he levies the tributes which have added so much to his own well-being and the happiness of mankind. In this short period he has increased his capital six times over and brought to the aggregate of national wealth more than twice as much as have the railroads of the country and three times as much as have the manufacturing interest, notwithstanding the fact that these last-named industries have always been peculiarly favored by the protecting and patronizing arm of the Government. The farmer has received of the Government little of its care. He has not sought it, nor has he complained, or is he complaining now. [Applause.]

The farmer does not take the view that the Government owes him anything. He does not believe in the idea that the Government is called upon to grant special favors. His idea is that the people must support the Government and not the Government the people. He regards, and his friends likewise, the appropriation annually made by the Government for the support of the Department of Agriculture not as a gift to himself, but as an investment from which the Government expects, and does actually receive, large profits. It is not the function of the Government to give either to the farmer or to any other class. [Applause.] The fact is the Government has nothing to give, for every dollar that goes into the Treasury of the United States is a trust fund and must be expended with that scrupulous care which is required of the management of such a fund. The farmer understands this, and hence you never hear of the spectacle of the farmer making a raid upon the Federal Treasury. He does expect, however, that in the investment which the Government makes of its funds for the benefit of all the people his securities, the best and soundest, should not be overlooked.

This is the position I take in reference to the bill under consideration. I do not regard it as a gift to the farmer, and if I did so regard it and then voted for it I would be unworthy the confidence which I believe my people repose in me. I look upon this appropriation as a business undertaking upon the part of the Government; and to point out to the farmer the best methods of farming, to demonstrate to him the value of seed selection, to show him by soil survey the kinds of crops best adapted to each particular community, and to explode for him by actual demonstration the almost countless vagaries respecting agriculture I regard as a duty which the Government owes to itself and to the farmer as a class which constitutes over one-third the population of the country. An appropriation for this purpose, I repeat, is not a gratuity to the farmer, but an investment upon the part of the Government, and the fact has been demonstrated time and time over that as an investment it brings back to the Government in profits and in improved farm conditions far more than any appropriation made by Congress for any other purpose. [Applause.]

I doubt not that the saving to the farmer through the work of the Department of Agriculture in exposing fallacious ideas with respect to farm methods in the last five years will more than doubly refund the annual appropriation for this Department, to say nothing of the benefits which have come to him through the efforts of the Department in pointing out to him the most improved methods in farm management and the like. Farming is no loose-jointed, haphazard business, which can be successfully run without regard for business methods. Agriculture is becoming a science, and it takes as much brain to run a farm successfully as it does to conduct a bank or defend a suit in court. [Applause.] The Department of Agriculture is doing a great work in its efforts to bring the farmer and the country to a realization of this fact, and every dollar we spend which has this for its ultimate object will return to us burdened with a wealth of profit. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I have wandered away from the purpose of my remarks. Let us get back on the track.

I want to bring the record to a point within the memory of the youngest of us, and again prove by it the falsity of the idea that the farmer is wanting in business capacity, and to show from it by incontrovertible figures that as a producer of wealth, as a contributor to our national well-being, the farmer as a class is without equal. [Applause.]

Sixteen years ago, according to the census reports, the annual value of the products of the farm amounted to $2,400,000,000. This is an enormous sum, but it does not approach the achievement of the farmer as a wealth producer in the year just closed, when our farms yielded a wealth valued at $6,415,000,000. In this short period the farmer has trebled the productiveness of his capital and in one year wrung from the soil products the aggregate of whose money value is only a third less than the total capital accumulated by manufactures during the entire existence of the country. The earning capacity of the farmer during last year was more than three times as great as the earning capacity of the railroads of the country for the same time, and the value of his crop for that year was sufficient to cancel the mortgaged indebtedness of the United States in 1890. It was enough to pay three times over the national debt of the country and to bear the burden of conducting the Government for a period of eight years. Does this look like the farmer is not a good business man? He is the most productive agent of our country. [Applause.]

The record is not complete. Secretary Wilson, in his annual report, in speaking of the increase in farm values—that is, the additions to the permanent capital invested in agricultural pursuits—said: "Every sunset during the past five years has registered an increase of $3,400,000 in the value of farms in this country; every month has piled this value upon value until it has reached $102,000,000." In other words, the farmer has added the stupendous sum of $6,133,000,000 to his capital in the last five years. Does this bear out the assertion that he is a business drone? Where is the industry that can show a like accumulation of wealth in the same period of time? The fact is that his achievements in producing and accumulating wealth are unparalleled by any people of any nation on earth engaged in any of the occupations of man. [Applause.]

But this is not all the American farmer has accomplished in the last sixteen years. In addition to adding over $6,000,000,000 to his capital and growing in one year products valued at over $6,000,000,000, he has been doing a little international trading and some national-debt paying. The Secretary of Agriculture says of him, in his report, that he has—> reversed an advance international balance of trade and has been building up one favorable to this country by sending to foreign nations a surplus which in sixteen years has aggregated $12,000,000,000, leaving an apparent net balance of trade during that time amounting to $5,092,000,000, after an adverse balance against manufactures and other products not agricultural, amounting to $543,000,000 has been offset.

These figures show, Mr. Chairman, that the farmer, aside from feeding and clothing the people of this great nation, and our home markets consume 86 per cent of our products, has sold $12,000,000,000 worth of products in foreign markets in competition with the cheap labor of the world and to a people whose standard of living is not so high as our own, and whose necessities are, therefore, not so great. He supplies one-third of the grain, one-fifth of the wheat, and three-fourths of the cotton used by the entire world. It is thus seen that this unpretentious American farmer, unaided by the favoritism of the Government, sets the table, provides the meals, and furnishes the clothing for the greater portion of mankind. [Applause.] But this is not all.

The farmer has not only contributed more than any other class to the aggregate wealth of the nation, but his skill and energy have secured to us immunity from debt in our international trade relations. But for the products of the farm there would have been charged up against us during the last sixteen years a foreign debt of $543,000,000, the adverse balance against manufactures and other products not agricultural. The farmer has not only paid this international debt, but, in addition to that, has brought to our shores to swell the aggregate of our national wealth more than $5,092,000,000. He has not only saved us from becoming a debtor nation, but has made us the world's greatest creditor. [Applause.]

During the last fiscal year our farms, after fully meeting the demands of the home market, supplied our foreign customers with products valued at $827,000,000. As an international trader, the farmer secured to himself and his country a net balance amounting in one year to $285,000,000. He has been correctly named "the international paymaster" of the country, for this net balance means that he has not only paid for all he has bought, but in his trading has made his customers debtors to him in this sum, which becomes available as an offset to foreign debts which have been incurred by other industries.

This is not all of the farmer's splendid record. He is to-day the main support of the manufactures of this country and the world. It is estimated that 2,154,000 persons in this country alone are dependent for their living directly upon manufacturing industries, which in turn depend solely upon the products of the farm for the raw material which goes to make their finished product. These establishments, thus dependent directly upon the farm, employ 38 per cent of all persons engaged in manufacturing and are capitalized at over $4,000,000,000. Suppose, Mr. Chairman, some great disaster should come to the farms of our country, the effect would be a complete paralysis of these great establishments, and to the millions of their employees would come actual want and suffering. So intimately associated with the well-being of the nation and for that matter, the world, is the prosperity of our farmer, that any disaster to him is immediately and acutely felt by every other industry. If the boll-weevil should invade the cotton fields of the South and reduce their yield to any considerable extent, despair and panic would seize upon millions of people in this country, England, and Germany, and dire want would enter the homes where happiness and contentment now dwell as the result of the generous bounty of King Cotton, of which Grady eloquently said:

> The trespass of a little green worm on its leaf is more to England than the advance of the Russian army on her Asian outposts.

[Loud applause.]

An industry of first place in importance to the well-being of the nation and having in it such great possibilities for future development, we naturally presume would take first rank in the consideration of the Government. To aid in its promotion and development we would reasonably expect to find the Government making the most liberal and unstinted appropriations. Such would be the policy dictated by practical wisdom and sound business foresight upon the part of the lawmaking power. That a contrary policy has been pursued by Congress, that the appropriations for agricultural purposes have been small in amount and grudgingly made, I wish to prove by official statistics and a few comparisons.

I wish to show, in the first place, that in proportion to the amount of land devoted to agricultural purposes and to the number of people engaged in agricultural pursuits, we do less as a nation in aid of this industry than any other people. I do not know to what it is due, whether to the farmer's lack of organization, or his modesty in seeking aid at the hands of the Government, or to our failure to appreciate the great importance of agriculture, but the fact remains that our appropriations for this purpose, as compared to the appropriations of other civilized nations for the same purpose, are strikingly discreditable to our statesmanship. [Applause.]

Our annual expenditure for agricultural purposes is less than $7,000,000. Russia, which does less for its people than any nation on earth, with an area only a little more than double that of ours, recognizing that the full development of agriculture must mean increased wealth to her as a nation, appropriates $25,000,000 annually for this purpose; the Republic of France, following the course pointed out by her great Napoleon, with an area less than that of the State of Texas, annually expends in aid of this industry over $9,000,000, while Austria gives $9,275,000, Hungary $9,400,000, and Japan, the youngest of the world powers, nearly $4,000,000 to bring about the highest development of their agricultural interests. To put us on a parity with other nations in appropriations for agriculture, population and area considered, the bill now under discussion would call for an expenditure approximating $100,000,000. We are asking for less than a twelfth of that amount.

In this comparison we must not forget the fact that in the countries mentioned centuries of experience and experimentation and demonstration have practically solved every problem that could possibly arise with respect to agriculture. With them these large appropriations are made not so much with a view of further developing the industry as with a purpose of conserving it. The first duty has already been performed, and they now are only concerned in holding intact what they have already done.

With us the conditions are entirely different. Comparatively, ours is a new country, and with us agriculture is in its infancy and in the process of growth. We are called upon not only to conserve the $23,000,000,000 invested in agriculture, but we must also provide the means of solving the thousands of problems incident to our great variety of soil and climate, which give rise to constant and expensive experimentation. In proportion to the necessity for it, we should appropriate a greater sum for agriculture than any nation on earth. [Applause.]

Let us carry the comparison further. To aid in increasing its productiveness and its value as an asset to the nation, every acre of land devoted to agriculture in France receives an appropriation of 9.8 cents; while Austria appropriates 13.3 cents per acre; Hungary, 12.4 cents, and Russia, approximately, 4 cents; while we, so generous in our care of every other industry, expend less than 2 cents for each acre of land in cultivation. And in doing even this much for the nation's greatest industry, we must run the gantlet of the so-called "economists" and meet the charge of extravagance in dealing with the money of the people. [Applause.]

The Government expenditure per capita of agricultural population for the Republic of France amounts to 52 cents; for Austria, 69 cents; Hungary, 90 cents, and for the United States, which owes more to its agriculture than any of these nations, the expenditure is 16 cents.

The per capita tax for agricultural purposes for the United States is about 7 cents. To encourage the most liberal contributor to the nation's wealth, to stimulate him to a more scientific cultivation of the soil that its productiveness may be increased, to aid him in producing the food and clothing for a population of 83,000,000 people, to help him in his efforts to sell $850,000,000 worth of his products in foreign markets, to cooperate with him in his yearly task of overcoming an adverse balance of trade amounting to millions of dollars—incurred by other industries in their trade with foreign nations—we give the stupendous sum of 7 cents per capita each year. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, such extravagance as this, such downright partiality to the farmer is enough to throw into spasms every so-called economist in this House, and to bring dreams of national bankruptcy to every so-called guardian of the National Treasury in the land. [Laughter.] The thought is soul-harrowing! To burden ourselves to the extent of 7 cents per capita annually in aid of agriculture, while we tax ourselves only twenty times as much for the Navy in a period of profound peace, is sufficient to drive into madness the world-power dreamers and big-stickers of the country. [Laughter and applause.]

How much wiser it would be in the minds of these gentlemen who see so much of glory to the nation in its magnificent Navy and splendid Army, while failing to realize how much greater would be the glory in the happiness and well-being of her great agricultural class [applause], to take the entire appropriation of the Department of Agriculture and with it add one more battle ship to the Navy, or increase the Army by one more regiment. Ah, gentlemen, our policy toward the agricultural interests of our country, our stinginess and illiberality in dealing with it, are a travesty upon our good sense and statesmanship. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have shown by statistics, which I regard as reliable, that as a nation we do less for agriculture than any other nation which takes equal rank with us in the affairs of mankind. I wish to show now by equally reliable figures that the charge upon the Treasury for agricultural purposes is less than any other charge for any other undertaking for which appropriation is made by the Government. I want the country to know exactly what we are expending for agriculture in comparison with our expenditures for other purposes. I want to shut the mouths of the so-called "economists" who seem to find a special delight in finding fault with any extravagance in the administration of the Department. I want to direct their attention to expenditures which ought to furnish work and thought for the genuine reformer. [Applause.]

I have prepared a table which shows the aggregate appropriations for all purposes for the past six fiscal years, together with a statement showing the average annual expenditure for that time, the aggregate for each specific purpose, and the annual average for each specific purpose. I take the figures from the statement of Senator ALLISON, made just prior to the adjournment of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

Purpose of appropriation.	Total for 6 years.	Annual average.
Appropriation for all purposes	$4,594,225,982	$749,037,663
Post-Office Department	882,993,168	147,161,028
Pensions	846,791,090	141,131,848
Army	545,746,106	90,957,684
Navy	502,317,683	83,719,615
Sundry civil expenses	327,401,735	54,566,956
Legislative expenses	159,456,711	26,576,118
River and harbor	115,743,786	19,290,630
Indians	52,777,576	8,796,262
Fortifications	43,501,095	7,250,182
Agriculture	32,545,080	5,424,180

Diplomatic and consular service, District of Columbia, and Military Academy not included.

This statement shows that for the six years 1901–1906 the total expense of conducting the affairs of this nation reaches the enormous total of $4,594,000,000, in round numbers, and that the average annual expense for that period is approximately $750,000,000, an average which has been increasing each year until a total of $818,000,000 is reached for the present fiscal year.

These figures argue both the bigness and the richness of this nation. [Applause.] Only the productive genius of the American people could sustain such a tremendous drain upon their earning capacity, and yet, Mr. Chairman, the energies of our agricultural classes alone during the last year produced a crop whose money value was greater by a million and five hundred thousand dollars than the grand total of the expenses of this Government for six years.

A glance at this table brings out another interesting fact—that the industry, agriculture, which stands first in importance to the nation in the capital invested in it, first in the number of people engaged in it, first in earning capacity, first in yearly contributions to national wealth, second to none in the civic and political virtue of those engaged in it, stands last in the amount of appropriation devoted by the Government to its encouragement and development.

Let us somewhat analyze these statements.

The largest expenditure, about one-fifth of the total, is used in the conduct of our postal system. Every class and condition of our population shares the benefit of this burden, and while there may be need for reform in this service, correction of abuses, and reduction of expenses, there is no cause for general complaint.

Next to expensiveness and holding it a close second comes the appropriations for pensions, with its annual drain upon the Treasury of $141,000,000. The policy of caring for the soldiers and sailors of the nation is well settled, but the haste with which we pass this pension bill, the lack of consideration which we give it, is not calculated to encourage the most economic administration of the service. The looseness with which we consider this bill must inspire in the administrative officer of this service an idea that no laxity of administration will find rebuke at the hands of Congress. I am confident that a thorough overhauling of our pension system would bring about a substantial decrease in the appropriation for that service.

For legislative expenses, the appropriation with which we run ourselves, entail a burden of over $26,000,000 a year. Here, too, there is place for reform. Carbuncles have grown up all over us, and the right use of the economist's knife would work an undoubted benefit. [Laughter and applause.]

For sundry civil expenses we appropriate over $54,000,000 each year. The pruning knife would not be amiss in this service.

To the opening up and improving of our rivers and harbors—the arteries of our commerce and the agencies of our cheapest and best transportation—we appropriate only $19,000,000 per year. This is a line of work which has been woefully neglected to the hurt of the commerce and general well-being of the nation. Each year ought to find us appropriating $50,000,000 for the improvement of our waterways, in order that the people might escape the tyranny of noncompetitive rates; but with this as with every other appropriation which looks to the improvement of the general welfare we find a policy of parsimony and niggardly neglect. [Applause.]

To the education of the Indian, for the improvement of his condition, we annually expend nearly $9,000,000; while for the diffusion of scientific knowledge among the farmers, to the improvement of agricultural conditions, to the solution of the thousands of problems arising out of that occupation, to the increased productiveness of the soil, to the introduction of new crops, to the testing of new theories in the crucible of demonstration, to experiments in seed selection and plant breeding, to all of the various phases of farm life and the betterment of it, we have appropriated an average of $5,424,000 per annum for the last six years. To a few thousand dusky redskins roving over the western plains we give more in the way of support by nearly two to one than is given in aid of the greatest industry of the nation [Applause.]

I have purposely left for the last the greatest burden upon the taxpayers of the country—the military arm of the Government. The appropriation for the support of the Army and Navy, including fortifications, for the past six years, aggregates the stupendous total of $1,091,000,000, a sum equal to one-fourth of the aggregate appropriation for all other purposes. One out of every four dollars gathered from the people, and appropriated, it is presumed, in their interest must be used for the maintenance of these establishments in this era of peace. For the Navy alone we are spending this fiscal year over $100,000,000—over $8,000,000 per month, $280,000 per day, $770 per minute. The expense for the Army is not so great, but it is large enough to attract the attention of those who really want reform in expenditure. Why these enormous appropriations for the military establishments of the nation? Is there any danger of invasion? Is there any reason to expect any breach in our friendly relations with any of the nations of the world?

I concede the necessity for reasonable appropriations for Army and Navy purposes, but I deny the necessity for an everlasting increase in this direction. Forty-two million dollars of the people's money were appropriated for the construction of new battle ships this fiscal year. This sum would bear the expenses of the Agricultural Department for six years. Why this burden? It is said the safety of the nation lies in its Navy and Army. I concede them their place as contributors to our protection, but I assert it without a fear of contradiction that the ultimate safety of the nation must rest in the prosperity and happiness, the patriotism and virtue of the great mass of its population. [Applause.] We measure the fighting strength of a nation not by the number of its fighting battalions, as shown in its permanent naval and army organizations, but by the love of its people for its institutions, and the courage with which they are willing to fight for them. [Applause.] We might with safety wipe from the face of the earth both our Army and Navy without endangering the national interest, for in every American home there is at least one boy ready to fly to the defense of his country, at the first alarm of danger. [Applause.]

I want economists of this House to direct their efforts to a reduction of these appropriations, which, beyond a reasonable limit, can have no other purpose than the glorification—yes, the deification—of that miserable spirit of militarism rampant in the country. [Applause.] If these gentlemen have designs upon this modest bill carrying the appropriation for the support of the Agricultural Department, I want them to dismiss them in order that their undivided abilities may be directed to the reduction of the Navy bill, which will take from the Treasury more in one month than we appropriate for agriculture in an entire year. I want them to whet their knives for the next Army bill, which does the same thing. I want them to know that agriculture stands at the foot of the ladder in the consideration of this House, and burdens the taxpayers with the least appropriation made by Congress. I want them to focus their efforts to the accomplishment of real reforms. I want them to know that it is an unwise statesmanship which economizes at the expense of agriculture, and that every dollar carried in this bill is an investment which will return to the enrichment of the nation, rather than an expenditure. [Applause.]

We could well afford to double the amount which we are appropriating for the Department of Agriculture in this bill, and even then the charge of partiality to the farmer could not lie against us. There never was a time when there was greater demand for the products of the farm nor when the task of supplying them was harder. Investigators tell us that the demand for breadstuffs is gradually outgrowing the capacity for supplying them. We know that the drift of our population is toward the cities and towns, and that each hour increases the number of people employed in occupations other than agriculture, while there is a corresponding decrease in the number employed in that occupation. Each minute adds to the number who must be fed and clothed by the products of the farm. These conditions, necessitating increased farm productiveness, furnish the strongest possible reasons for us to redouble our efforts to stimulate and encourage agriculture.

It is said that "the Congress has certainly dealt most liberally with the Department of Agriculture." I deny it. This bill carries the sum of $7,200,000 for the support of that Department of our Government which deals with the greatest industry in the land. Can we say that we are dealing "liberally" with this Department when we give to it only one out of every $150 appropriated by this Congress? Does it lie in our mouths to say that we are dealing "liberally" with the Department of Agriculture when we appropriate for the Navy $15, to the Army $10, and for pensions $20, while approprating only $1 for this Department? Is it "liberality" to the Department of Agriculture to appropriate for it a sum less than that given to any other Department of the Government? If so, then I confess my ignorance of the meaning of the term "liberality."

The truth is, we have been anything but liberal in dealing with this Department of the Government; we have been parsimonious, if not actually stingy. I would like to see double the amount carried in this bill put into the hands of that most honest, capable, and patriotic man, Secretary Wilson [applause], who has the unique distinction of representing the nation's greatest industry at the Cabinet table of the President of the United States, and who, I am sure, would expend every dollar of it wisely, economically, and in such a manner as to bring about the climax of our country's agricultural possibilities. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to congratulate the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] who has just taken his seat upon his magnificent argument in favor of larger appropriations for the Agricultural Department and for the development of the agricultural areas of our country. It is a source of regret to me that the appropriations for this great Department of the Government which involves benefit to so many of the people of our great country, are not more liberal than they have been in the past, and I trust that the patriotism of the Representatives on the floor of this House will inspire larger appropriations for agricultural interests in the future, because, as has been so well said by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], the appropriations which are made for the benefit of the agricultural interests of our country are simply an investment made by the Government, which brings back to the country and to the people, as well as the Government, greater returns than appropriations which are made for any other Department of the Government. The amount appropriated by this bill for the ordinary and regular routine work of the Department of Agriculture is $6,692,650, showing only a net increase of $187,610. The committee has added "emergency," or "temporary" appropriations, amounting to $320,000, for the purpose of combating the cotton boll weevil in the cotton States, the gypsy and brown-tail moths in some of the New England States, and the Texas cattle-fever tick in the South. The total amount carried by this bill is, therefore, $7,200,300.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very conservative bill, and the appropriation "a drop in the bucket" as compared with the appropriations which are made for the other Departments of the Government. I dare say that we have not stopped to consider the difference in the appropriations made for the other Departments and the appropriations made for this, the greatest of any which we support by appropriations made by the Government. I want, for the sake of comparison, to call attention to the difference in appropriations made for the people that develop this country, for the people that maintain its prosperity, and the appropriations which are made for mere show and the purpose of maintaining not only upon the sea but upon the land the "big stick" idea which is so prominent throughout the United States of America. [Applause.] In order that I might do so accurately I took occasion to ask for absolute official figures from the Departments of the Government, so that I might give the House the benefit of them without mere speculation. The first appropriation made for the Agricultural Department was in 1839, and the small sum of $1,000 was appropriated for that year. From that year until this different appropriations have been made, and from 1839 to 1906 the total amount appropriated is $65,737,272.12. As has been suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] it seems to me that the consideration of that total appropriation should arouse the Representatives upon the floor of this House to do more for the agricultural interests of the country, and cause them to see that the amount of the appropriations for the greatest interests that we have in this country are more liberal. In order to find out the expenditures in the Navy Department, for instance, I asked for official figures from that great Department, and I want it understood that I am not criticising anything that has been done for that Department in view of the emergencies which have arisen and in view of the necessities by which it is surrounded; but when we make an appropriation so out of proportion for one Department in comparison with another, then it seems to me we should stop and consider and see whether or not our partiality is not running wild in one direction and our parsimony "going to seed" in another direction.

I asked for a statement in reference to the Navy Department covering the period of time only from the close of the Spanish-American war. I did not want included in this statement anything which was incurred by reason of the extraordinary expense which devolved upon us by reason of carrying on successfully the war with Spain, and hence I asked only for a statement subsequent to the time of the close of the Spanish-American war down to date. What do you suppose the total expenditure for the Navy Department has been from then until now? It amounts to $687,865,636.04. Over $637,000,000 for ships and the paraphernalia of war and $65,000,000 for the toilers of this land from 1839 to 1905! Now, let us take the expenditures which have been made for the Army from the close of the Spanish-American war down to the present time, because it is that period only that I propose to compare with all the time for which appropriations have been made for the Department of Agriculture, and we find the total appropriation for the Army—and this includes the insular possessions, and that is the trouble with us. The policy of the Republican party has resulted absolutely in robbing our own people in this country in order that we might take care of some possessions 10,000 miles away, for a people who have no sentiments or ideas in common with our own, for the sake of saying that we are a world power. We have been appropriating enormous sums to spread abroad into unknown seas and unknown territory, and have expended our money for the benefit of those people, while our own people in this country have been refused money for the development of our internal commerce, our waterways, and necessary public buildings. [Applause.]

We find the total appropriations for the Army, from 1900 down to 1905, is the enormous sum of $840,680,883.04. In other words, we have spent for the implements of warfare in this country the enormous sum of $1,528,546,519.08 since the close of the Spanish-American war, while we have spent for the agriculturists of this country, the ones who protect and take care of us when it comes to our foreign trade and the settlement of our international books of exchange, the comparatively insignificant sum of $65,000,000 from 1839 to 1905, a period of sixty-six years. I say, weighing the words as I use them, that it is a shame that the representatives of the people of this country have no more appreciation of the development that is being made throughout the country by "the man behind the plow," by "the man with the hoe," than to deny to them necessary appropriations to develop the agriculture of this country, and spend enormous sums in our foreign possessions on Malays, Indians, Chinese, Japanese, negroes, and what not, for God only knows who and what they are. [Applause.] When we wake up to the importance of giving to our own people the benefits of our own revenues and the money that is taken from their pockets by means of taxation; when we wake up to the necessity of developing our country here at home, within our own borders, among our own people, to benefit them and our native land, then we will have arisen to that standard we ought to occupy as representatives of the greatest people beneath the shining canopy of God Almighty's heaven. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen and Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to some remarks made in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, to demonstrate what the agriculturists of this country are doing for the country. The Secretary opens his annual report with this significant statement:

> The well-being of the American farmer is a matter of profound interest to the entire country. It is, therefore, in the highest degree gratifying to present to your consideration the following evidence of the unprecedented prosperity that has in this and recent years rewarded the diligence of the farmer and the efforts of this Department in his behalf.

All that is true when we take into consideration the fact the farmer has accomplished what he has accomplished without the aid of the National Government largely, but by his own efforts, by the brawn of his own arm and by the sweat of his own face. But let us see just for a moment what he has actually accomplished:

> Out of the enormous productions of the farms of this country the wants of 83,000,000 people have been supplied, and there remains a surplus large enough to become a generous contribution to the other nations of the earth and unparalleled among them as a national agricultural surplus.
> During the last fiscal year (ending June 30, 1905) the exported domestic farm products were valued at $827,000,000. This was $51,000,000 below the annual average of the five preceding years, although it was $132,000,000 above the average of the five years 1895–1899, and $157,000,000 above the average of 1890–1894.
> During the last sixteen years the domestic exports of farm products have amounted to $12,000,000,000, or $1,000,000,000 more than enough to buy all the railroads of the country at their commercial valuation, and this with a mere surplus for which there was no demand at home.
> While the farmer has been a producer and a trader, he has also been an international paymaster. In his foreign trade of 1905 he had a net balance in his favor amounting to $285,000,000; in the preceding five years this favorable balance averaged $461,000,000; during the five years 1895–1899 it averaged $328,000,000, and in the five years preceding that the average was $271,000,000.
> During the sixteen years past the farmer has secured a balance of $5,635,000,000 to himself in his international bookkeeping, and out of this he has offset an adverse balance of $543,000,000 in the foreign trade in products other than agricultural, and turned over to the nation from his account with other nations $5,092,000,000.

> Not content with his other achievements, the farmer lends his strong shoulder to the support of the manufactures of the country by furnishing raw materials. Computations based upon census information disclose the fact that farm products, to some extent obtained from other countries, constitutes 56.4 per cent of the total products, and 89.8 per cent of the total materials, of the industries utilizing agricultural products as materials, and these industries produce 36.3 per cent of all manufactured products and use 42 per cent of all materials employed in manufacturing.

At the same time these industries using agricultural materials employed 37.8 per cent of all persons engaged in manufacturing, and the capital of these industries is 42.1 per cent of the capital of all manufacturing establishments.

Restated in absolute terms, during the last census year the farm products employed in manufactures were valued at $2,679,000,000; the value of all materials, including the preceding amount, was $3,087,000,000; and the products of the industries using these materials were valued at $4,720,000,000. These industries employed 2,154,000 persons and had a capital of $4,132,000,000.

Such are the enormous interests, not engaged in agriculture, but in industries that could not maintain themselves without the farmer and his extraordinary productive ability.

I want to say that if it had not been for the farmers of this country this Government could not have spent $637,000,000 for the Navy, and could not have spent the $867,000,000 for the Army, and by doing so you place upon the backs of the laborer and the tiller of the soil in this country these great burdens; and when you do so you should be mindful of their interest, and they should have your highest consideration. [Applause.]

Now, in view of the fact that the farmer has been so kind to the country, I want to see how the Republican party, into whose keeping every branch of the Government is committed, has been treating him. I have taken some trouble in order to get together some facts and figures, which I desire to present to you for your consideration. We boast to-day of our great prosperity, and indeed we have prosperity. Nobody denies that, and we are all proud of it; but we have the prosperity concentrated largely in the hands of the few and the favored classes. Still it is claimed that our protective tariff is what brings to us all the prosperity which we enjoy. Now, permit me for a while to examine this high tariff as it effects the agriculturists of the country and see if he is not entitled to revision of the tariff, which practically from every section of the country he is demanding.

China has its Great Wall, isolating that Empire from the rest of the world. It is solid, masterful, material. The United States has a still more sacred wall than has China. This is the protective-tariff wall, worshipped by the rich, guarded by "stand-pat" politicians, and upheld for the benefit of a class of our citizens at the expense of the great mass of our people.

It has been said that this wall permits 3,000 immigrants a day to pass through it without realizing its existence; that it is impassable to some kinds of goods, a barrier to others, and offers no resistance to others. On the average, economists tell us that it costs more to get goods over or through it than it takes to get them over the highest mountain range or the widest ocean. In fact, calculations have been made which show that clothing, hardware, sugar, and many other necessaries of life can be carried three or four times around the world for less than it costs to get them through this American tariff wall. It is claimed that this wall was built to develop infant American industries; in other words, to make all workers in the United States not manufacturers contribute in higher prices for home-made goods a sufficient amount to establish and maintain a great home manufacturing interest. The device used in the original construction of the wall was the pauper-labor shibboleth. We were told that our home manufacturers could not compete with the pauper labor manufacturing interests of Europe, and that a barrier should be erected to keep out all undue foreign competition. The census of 1900 shows that of our then 76,000,000 population about 29,000,000 were employed for gain. Of these workers about 7,000,000 were found in the manufacturing column, so that we had about 22,000,000 workers contributing in higher prices for manufactured goods to make possible the existence of a home manufacturing interest numbering 7,000,000. In other words, 22,000,000 workers support themselves, and then contribute indirectly a percentage of their profits to the support of the other 7,000,000 manufacturing workers. Of the 29,000,000 employed for gain, about 10,000,000 belong to agriculture. To be accurate I submit the following:

Census table of workers.

1. Agricultural pursuits	10,438,219
2. In professional service	1,264,737
3. In domestic and personal service	5,691,746
4. In trade and transportation	4,778,233
5. In manufacturing and mechanical pursuits	7,112,987
Total	29,285,922

It is evident that the first four classes have no direct interest in the tariff, and if time would permit I could show by strict analysis that they have very little indirect interest. These four classes number 23,172,935 workers.

Nor are all of the fifth class directly interested in any protective tariff, much less the high protective tariff taxes imposed by the Dingley tariff law now in force and which is considered so sacred that the "stand-patters" will not permit it to be changed. [Applause.]

The census divides this class into constituent parts, and it is fair to say that the following elements are not benefited at all:

Carpenters and joiners	1,205,382
Masons	322,696
Painters	555,971
Paper hangers	44,008
Plasterers	71,412
Plumbers	195,768
Roofers	27,573
Fishermen and oystermen	73,819
Miners, gold and silver	59,095
Coal miners	344,292
Other miners	133,010
Quarrymen	34,598
Bakers	79,407
Butchers	114,212
Butter and cheese makers	19,261
Confectioners	31,242
Millers	40,576
Other food preparers	32,442
Blacksmiths	227,076
Cabinetmakers	35,641
Coopers	37,226
Saw and planing mill employees	161,687
Dressmakers	347,076
Milliners	87,881
Seamstresses	151,379
Total	4,432,721

In addition to these there are whitewashers, well borers, turpentine drillers, straw workers, gas works employees, electric light and power company employees, cotton ginners, candle, soap, and tallow makers, photographers, soldiers and sailors, and others, which I omit for want of time.

It is enough to say that at least 4,432,721 of the 7,112,987 assigned to the manufacturing class by the census of 1900 are not benefited by the tariff. It is well to say, also, that the largest part of the preceding list belongs to the building trades, the very workers whose wages, the highest of all workers, is attributable, not to the tariff, but to the labor unions, of which they form the backbone. [Applause.]

There are left, then, 2,680,266 workers who may be in some degree indirectly benefited by the tariff, but this is not conceded save for this general argument.

The protective tariff, then, takes money out of the pockets of 26,605,656 workers to put it into the pockets of 2,680,266. That is to say, nine-tenths of the workers pay an unwarranted part of their profits to make possible the large profits of the other tenth. And the largest part of this inequitable assessment falls upon the 10,438,000 primary workers and producers who constitute the agricultural class. [Applause.]

The protective tariff affects injuriously both farmer and wage-earner, and to about the same extent, yet because of the different products which each has to sell, and the protectionist's claim as to each class, they will be considered separately, and I will discuss only the results as they affect the farmers, who are the producers.

Every article a farmer buys represents three distinct parts:

1. The natural sale price.
2. The increased price due to the tariff.
3. The increased price due to the trusts.

The wholesale dealer collects all these, with his profit, when he sells to the retail dealer, and the retail dealer collects all with his additional profit when he sells to the consumer, upon whom the whole burden falls.

The farmer never sees the tariff collector nor the tariff-trust-tax collector in person, but they are more fatal to him than rust, blight, boll weevil, locusts, or grasshoppers.

There are appropriations in this bill to take care of the boll weevil, the gypsy moth, and the brown-tail moth. Let me appeal to you in the name of God to revise the tariff and take care of the farmers in this country. [Applause.]

Take a pound of sugar bought from the merchant for 5½ cents. Its distribution is: To the merchant, 3 cents; to the Government, 2 cents; to the trusts, ½ cent.

In a pound of borax the Government would get nothing, the merchant 3 cents, and the trust 6 cents.

The average farmer's tariff taxes for each year have been calculated by economists and appear to be as follows:

Article.	Purchases.		Tariff taxes.		Total.
	Quantity.	Cost.	To United States.	To trusts.
Sugar	300 pounds	$18.00	$6.50	$1.50	$8.00
Woolen goods		20.00	1.50	5.00	6.50
Cotton goods		12.00	.50	2.75	3.25
Silk goods		4.00	.50	1.00	1.50
Linen goods		2.00	.20	.25	.45
Leather goods		12.00	.40	1.60	2.00
Hardware		3.00	.05	.95	1.00

Article.	Purchases.		Tariff taxes.		Total.
	Quantity.	Cost.	To United States.	To trusts.
Chinaware		$2.00	$0.10	$0.60	$0.70
Furniture		10.00	.20	1.50	1.70
Farm implements		30.00	.25	5.00	5.25
Window glass	¼ box	1.20	.10	.40	.50
Other glass		1.50	.15	.45	.60
Lead, in paints	30 pounds	2.00	.15	.35	.50
Chemicals		2.50	.30	.90	1.20
Tin plate	50 pounds	2.40	.05	.85	.90
Wire and other nails	100 pounds	3.00		.75	.75
Barb and other wire	80 pounds	3.00		1.00	1.00
Tobacco		10.00	.60	1.90	2.50
Miscellaneous		99.75	6.45	10.35	16.80
Total		238.35	18.00	37.10	55.10

These averages of consumption per family are found by dividing the entire consumption of the country by the number of families. The average consumption of sugar per family is 360 pounds, at a cost of $20. The retail value of cotton goods per family is $30; woolens, $25; silks, $12; furniture, $15; miscellaneous articles, $70. It will be seen that the table has made fair allowances for the consumption of the average farmer's family. As this farmer is as industrious as the head of other families he ought to have full share of all the necessities, as well as of the luxuries. And he would have but for the tariff, which enables some families to have luxuries, while others have only necessities.

The estimates of this farmer's expenditures are conservative. That $15 per family for tariff taxes paid the Government is reasonable is evident from the fact that an average of $3.17 per capita, or $15.85 per family of five, actually reached the Treasury of the United States in 1904. Of course several profits were added to these taxes on their way from the factory to the farmer. That $41 per family for tariff trusts is not an exaggeration is evidenced from the fact that 800 trusts, with $8,000,000,000 capital, were published in a table prepared by the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] in 1903, and that the net profits of one of these—the United States Steel Corporation—were $133,000,000 in 1904, of which at least $75,000,000 were tariff taxes. If one trust collects $5 per family, it is reasonable to argue that the other 799 trusts collect the remaining $36 per family.

For every $238 expended by the average farmer's family the Government receives $18 and the trusts $37. The 10,000,000 farmers' families then contribute $180,000,000 to the Government and $370,000,000 by reason of the tariff to the 800 or more trusts made possible by the tariff. One-sixth of the average farmer's expenses, or 16 per cent, goes not to the Government, but to fatten the unlawful trusts.

The protectionist argues that farm products are all protected, and that protected mills give more work and a larger home market to the farmer, and, therefore, better prices.

Corn, wheat, barley, potatoes, hay, eggs, etc., do have tariff duties, but they are not effective. Prices for these things are not fixed in the home market, but in the market of the world. Besides protection does not furnish a market for wheat and cotton. One-third of our wheat and three-fifths of our cotton must be sold abroad, and until all of our products are consumed at home the home market can not fix the prices. Every year the home market becomes less and less able to consume the home productions, and the farmer is thus made more and more dependent upon the foreign field.

If grain prices are averaging rather high for the last few years, cotton prices have averaged rather higher still. But cotton is on the free list. The protective schedules can not claim credit for any of these advanced prices for farm products. The prices have gone higher because of bad crops in Europe, a change in the economics of Europe, and a decline in the value of gold. The profits which these high prices ought to insure the farmer are unlawfully diverted from his pocket to the pockets of the trusts under the operation of a tariff which precludes the farmer from expending his profits in the same market which created them. He gets high prices from abroad, and pays these profits away in exorbitantly high prices to trusts, who have a monopoly of the home field. [Applause.]

Hon. Benjamin Butterworth on May 14, 1890, said:

The manufacturers and the trusts get the protection and the profits of the tariff—the farmer gets the husks and the humbug.

The tariff on but two farm products is effective, viz, sugar and wool. The tariff on sugar is effective because we are importers and not exporters. Every farmer who raises sugar gets a protection of $1.80 on each 100 pounds. Few farmers raise sugar, and therefore the argument is not materially changed. In the matter of wool it is evident that protection has not built up the industry. Once the principal field for it working was East of the Mississippi River. In this region less than half as many sheep are to be found now as were there thirty-five years ago. Besides, all the sheep in the country are only five-sixths of what they were twenty years ago. It is said that Muhlhauser's shoddy mill in Cleveland, Ohio, turns out more pounds of old rags ground into "shoddy" than there are pounds of wool gathered from all the sheep of Ohio. The tariff is responsible for this "shoddy." Coarse wools are dutiable from 4 to 7 cents and fine wools from 11 to 12 cents. Fine wools are therefore dear and the price of woolen goods expensive. There are about 42,000,000 sheep in the country, from which 280,000,000 pounds of wool are taken. Each family is therefore entitled to 5 sheep and 33 pounds of wool. Protection may therefore be of advantage to the farmer of about 3 cents per pound on the wool account or about $1 a year.

On all other articles, as barley, potatoes, etc., economists say a most liberal allowance for tariff benefit would be $2. The tariff benefits the farmers, or a part of them, to the extent of $1.80 on sugar, $1 on wool, and $2 on other products, or $4.80 per family. He pays $55.10 into the tariff juggle and gets back $4.80, or a clear loss per family of $50.30. Counting what he pays to the Government—$18—with this benefit, he puts in $55.10 and indirectly gets the benefit of $22.80, and is therefore forced to make a clear gift to the trusts of $32.30 per family, or $323,000,000 per annum for the entire farming class.

THIS IS THE DIRECT LOSS OF THE FARMER.

What is his indirect loss? He pays high freights on his products. Manufacturers and large dealers pay lower freights. Were it not for the high freights of the farmer, which are generally local rates, the lower freight rates could not and would not be given to the large shipper.

In 1898 the Atlantic Seaboard Line made the published rate on wheat for export from the Mississippi River the same as the rate from Chicago; in 1899 they lowered the Mississippi River rate to 85 per cent of the Chicago rate. Under that arrangement grain for export paid 13½ cents per 100 pounds from the Mississippi River and 16 cents from Chicago, while grain for consumption in the East paid 17½ cents from Chicago, 20½ cents from the Mississippi if it came from west of the river, and 24½ cents if it originated at the river. These are mere juggling expressions of the burden designed to be cast upon agriculture by transportation companies. If they could carry wheat for export at a low rate, they could carry wheat for the home consumption at the same rate. Thus, notwithstanding our free trade between States, the transportation companies put upon wheat raisers for the two-thirds crop for home consumption a tax of nearly 25 per cent more than they charged upon a third of the crop for export. Wheat grown west of the river was carried farther and at 25 per cent less. What they professed to lose on export wheat they recouped on home wheat and other farm products. It is safe to say that the prices on home products, being a monopoly, will always be used by transportation companies, through their traffic association agreements, to recoup all losses to trusts for cheap transportation of trust-made goods when exported for sale at prices to foreigners less than they are sold to our own people. The great home market is a monopoly for the manufacturer, and also a monopoly for the transportation company.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, upon complaint against these foreign export rates, said:

The American producer has not been materially benefited by them. The millions sacrificed by the railroads has been a donation to the foreigner.

A MEMBER. Ain't it the truth?

Mr. CANDLER. The railway profits were so great on the home trade as to permit this sacrifice of millions to the foreigner.

In the matter of cotton, the low through rates to northern manufacturers are kept up by the high local rates. These all fall on the farmer. To carry cotton from Memphis to New York, as was done in 1900, for 55½ cents, and from Memphis to the Carolina mills at 59½ cents, not only discriminated against the farmers, but against southern mills. The railroads in the South would not reduce the through rate to the Carolina mills from 59½ to 55½ cents, because they said this would force them to lower the local rates in Georgia, the Carolinas, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee.

Four gigantic railroad traffic associations parcel out the through freight and make lower rates thereon, leaving the local rates untouched. The through rates are in the interest of jobbers and exporters, and the local rates fall on the producers and enable the railroads to recoup what it loses on these rates through higher local rates paid by the farmer and men along the local line.

On through-rate rules Mobile and New Orleans are basing points, hence it is cheaper to ship goods from New York through Montgomery to Mobile and then back to Montgomery, 175 miles, than it is to ship from New York direct to Montgomery.

Again, through the contracts made by railroads with steamship lines, it is possible for New York merchants importing goods from abroad to have them shipped from Liverpool through New York to Chicago and then back to New York for less money than they would pay to ship direct from Liverpool to New York. The reduction in rates on imported goods on through bills of lading often offset the customs duty. Salt is shipped from Liverpool via New Orleans to Chicago cheaper than salt can be shipped from New Orleans to Chicago. When the Vermont State Grange complained against the Central Vermont Railway Company that it was charging less from Boston to Detroit than from Boston to St. Albans, Vt., Judge Cooley held that there was no justification for the increased charge over the shorter line, and that in all such cases the long-haul cheaper rate was only made possible by the short-haul higher rate. [Applause.]

From one of the leading colleges of America, a college built upon the philanthropy of that most gigantic monopoly, Standard Oil, whose rise and growth is but a record of commercial dishonor, duplicity, and crime—from the pen of a professor in that institution, Professor Myer, at the call and behest probably of transportation companies, comes this defense of discrimination:

> Discrimination—the result of the exercise of discretion—was the keystone of the situation. That discrimination was not the result of caprice; it was the result of meeting with intelligence and courage the needs of trade and industry. The effect of that discrimination was a heterogeneous mass of railroad rates that knit the different producing, distributing, and consuming sections of the country into a more compact trading unit than was to be found elsewhere in the world, and carried the exploitation of our resources further than has been carried the exploitation of the resources of any other country.

In other words, according to this learned college professor, discrimination has been the keynote of our progress. Discrimination as a result of discretion has exploited the United States as no other nation has ever been expoited. Discrimination has built up a series of trusts which are the wonder, but not the envy, of the world; discrimination has enabled the manufacturing class to subjugate the agricultural class and the consuming class, and from the plethora of their means to make itself the marvel, but not the envy, of the world; discrimination based upon discretion has given our transportation system the power and the right to destroy cities and towns, to wipe out fortunes and honestly acquired wealth, to invade any and every territory and impose its laws at will, to collect such local tolls from the entire people as will enable it to obey the behests of favored interests and the kings of finance, to transfer to itself such an aggregate of wealth as is accountable for on no theory other than that it has the discretion to steal and the right to select its victims. [Loud applause.]

Discrimination based upon discretion has enabled Standard Oil to throttle all competition and to exploit its unlawfully acquired products, by means of the stolen gains, in such way as no honestly acquired products in other climes have ever been exploited before. Discretion alone has turned our vast insurance system into a charnel house of dishonest, corrupt, and criminal exploitation, which has made it a stench in the nostrils of the world. Well may the learned professor in his defense of this monstrosity say that it was not the result of caprice. No; caprice has moments of remorse; caprice has moments when the golden reflection of reason exercises sway over the errant instincts; caprice at times rests from its iniquitous toil. [Applause.]

Discrimination, backed by intelligence without an iota of moral scruple and blazoned by a fierce rapacity which only an advocate could call courage, has given the world in the rise and growth of these enumerated institutions of the United States a set of examples which it refuses to imitate, and which we, the representatives of the people, thank God, are now making an effort to destroy. The heterogeneous mass of railroad rates that filches from one class of producers to build up another must be destroyed. The discrimination, the discretion, the intelligence, and the courage which enable the distributing class to enrich itself by unjust tolls on all classes of producers and consumers have aroused the slumbering lion of resistance, and despite the learning of paid professors, despite the zeal of paid lobbyists, and the advocacy in some instances of a subsidized press, and despite the gigantic power of the interest itself, the day of their overthrow and control is at hand. [Applause.] These discriminations have put upon the average farmer's family an additional expense of not less than $20 per annum, and very possibly $40. Had this sum been kept in the farmer's pocket it would have given the class to which he belongs each year the enormous sum of $200,000,000, which in a decade would have added to the rural wealth the still greater sum of $2,000,000,000.

The farmer loses an enormous amount because of the lack of canning factories throughout the country to save the tens of millions of bushels of fruit and vegetables which rot and waste because the tariff duties on sugar, glass, and tin plate about double the cost of these articles and make canning unprofitable. The tariff, which keeps out canning factories, costs the farmers hundreds of millions of dollars each year in wasted products. He loses through this waste not less than $10 per annum, and his class loses $100,000,000 per annum, or $1,000,000,000 in a decade. The farmer loses again through the restricted output of manufacturers of tariff-protected trusts. The trusts maintain high prices by limiting the output, employing fewer laborers, and paying less wages. These laborers have less to spend with the farmer, and the farmer must also pay the trust the higher price for the restricted goods. Protection many years ago may have given the farmer a home market for his goods; to-day it certainly restricts that market and costs him not less than $8 per annum, $80,000,000 to him and his fellow-producers every year, and $800,000,000 every ten years.

Taking his direct and indirect losses each year, they will certainly reach $75, and possibly $100. A saving of only $60 a year for twenty years for each farmer would more than double the farmer's wealth. If the farmers could have kept the $37 a year for the last twenty years in their pockets instead of being forced to pay it to the trusts they would now be from $6,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 better off and the trusts that much worse off, a consummation devoutly to be wished. [Applause.]

These are big figures, but they are correct figures. How can any man account for the billions of difference between rural and urban wealth, as disclosed by the last census, unless he accepts this explanation. Let us look at the table:

Urban and rural wealth of the United States.

Year.	Urban.	Rural.
1850	$3,160,000,000	$3,967,000,000
1860	8,180,000,000	7,980,000,000
1870	15,155,000,000	8,900,000,000
1880	31,538,000,000	12,104,000,000
1890	49,055,000,000	15,980,000,000
1900	73,786,000,000	20,514,000,000

During the tariff-for-revenue years—1850–1860—rural wealth doubled. It barely doubled in the next thirty years of high protection. In 1850 the farmers owned more than one-half the country; in 1900 they owned but little more than one-fifth. The average per capita of the farmers remained practically stationary from 1860 to 1900, while the urbanites increased sixfold. Of the $78,000,000,000 increase in wealth from 1860 to 1900 less than one-sixth went to the farmers, who make about half of the population, while of the $9,000,000,000 increase during the low-tariff era from 1850 to 1860 more than 44 per cent went to the farmers. All wealth doubled from 1850 to 1860, a thing which has never happened in any other decade. [Applause.] For all practical purposes the urban wealth may be taken as the manufacturing wealth. A glance at the classes making up the list of manufacturing and mechanical pursuits will show that they are not producers. The figures show that the manufacturing element is possessed of billions of dollars in actual wealth that have been unjustly put into their pockets by the protective tariff, and the agricultural class is short by many billions, because they have received no special benefits and have borne the "heat and burden of the day." Nor has this resulted because agriculture has lost its vigor.

Let us see. Take the exports of 1904, the last fiscal year:

	Amount.	Per cent.
Agriculture	$853,643,073	59.48
Manufactures	452,415,921	31.52
Mining	45,981,213	3.20
Forest	68,906,956	4.80
Fisheries	8,543,676	60
Miscellaneous	5,688,178	40
Total	1,435,179,017

This export of agriculture is at the world's price, and the export of manufactures is at prices abroad, which are less than at home. One is natural, the other artificial.

Eight hundred and fifty-three million six hundred and forty-three thousand and seventy-three dollars, the agricultural export being a surplus, more nearly represents what should be agricultural profits than any other standard. Deducting 10 per cent for charges, we have $768,278,766 that should have gone into the increase of rural wealth for that year. And these figures fairly represent the totals for ten years preceding. The decade ending in 1904 ought to show an increase of urban wealth of about $7,682,787,000. By reason of the unequal distribution of this money after it reaches home, the rural wealth for the decade will fall below $5,000,000,000 increase.

Farm values in sixty years have increased 600 per cent; manufacturing values, 1,300 per cent. A tariff for revenue would so distribute these values as to about reverse these increases, decade for decade.

Estimated loss, direct and indirect, by reason of the tariff, to the agricultural class of 10,000,000 workers.

Description.	Each family.	Farming class per year.	For ten years.
To trusts	$37	$370,000,000	$3,700,000,000
To railroads	20	200,000,000	2,000,000,000
Canning factories	10	100,000,000	1,000,000,000
Restricted output	8	80,000,000	800,000,000
Total	75	750,000,000	7,500,000,000

I have shown how we treat the producers, the wealth producers, of our country; but that is not all. While under the Republican tariff we are piling up on the farmers especially, and our other citizens, "burdens grievous to be borne," we are actually lightening the burdens on foreigners, and, as a direct result of our protective-tariff system, selling to foreigners cheaper than to home folks. Let us see. [Applause.]

Now listen and lend me your ears, that you may hear and not forget.

During the year ending June 30, 1905, the sale of American manufactured products to foreigners amounted to $543,607,975, of which fully 85 per cent, according to the estimates of well-informed exporters, was sold at cheaper prices than are charged for precisely the same goods sold to Americans. The average price of these goods in the foreign market, according to published tables made up from discount lists sent out by various exporting houses, is 20 per cent less than the selling price in the home market. On some goods, such as paints and varnishes, the price to foreigners is only 5 per cent less than to Americans; on agricultural implements, 10 to 50 per cent; on wire, more than 100 per cent; on such articles as wire rope and borax, 200 per cent.

These export prices are advertised in journals which have a strictly foreign circulation, and every effort is made to prevent these export trade journals from falling into the hands of American buyers. In 1902 the Democratic Congressional committee offered a reward of $100 for one of these export price journals, and in their efforts to place the advertisement were turned down by several prominent New York papers. The New York World, however, took the advertisement and published it, and the committee succeeded in obtaining several copies of these journals. In 1904 the same committee secured a much larger number of these journals, also an expert familiar with the export business who visited the selling offices of exporting manufacturers and obtained from them in their own handwriting many of the export prices published on the ten pages of the Democratic campaign book for that year.

Among the manufacturing firms represented in these lists as selling cheaper abroad than at home were the Russell & Erwin Manufacturing Company, Snell Manufacturing Company, John S. Fray & Co., Enterprise Manufacturing Company, A. M. Hayden & Russell, Burdsall & Ward Bolt and Nut Company, Bridgeport Chain Company, Covert Manufacturing Company, Beamis & Call Hardware Company, Pike Manufacturing Company, Henry Disston's Sons, and Stanley Rule and Level Company, all first-class companies, whose discount lists were published by Arkell & Douglas, 5 to 11 Broadway, in issue of June 18, 1904. From Exporters and Importers' Journal of same date, published by Henry W. Peabody, 17 State street, New York City, in addition to the firms named above, Andrew B. Hendrix & Co., Collins & Co., Cleveland Twist Drill Company, Boston and Lockport Lock Company, Charles Parker Company, and Millers Falls Company, all offer goods to foreigners at discounts ranging from 8 to 60 per cent greater than the discounts offered to American jobbers. Time and space forbid the multiplication of these companies, as a reference to the detailed exhibit of the said committee in the Campaign Book of 1904, where thousands of discounts are noted, and which have never been seriously denied, will furnish all the information desired in the most detailed form.

The Republican party has never denied the fact of sales abroad cheaper than at home, but has contented itself with denying the extent of these sales as charged by the Democratic party. Secretary Shaw, in a published speech, said:

> It is useless to deny, and, in my judgment, unwise to apologize, and a little short of foolishness to attempt to remedy the assumed evil.

[Applause.]

Senator GALLINGER limited the amount of these cheaper foreign goods to about $4,000,000 per annum. The Industrial Commission, on page 626 of volume 19 of its findings, said:

> In about 20 per cent of the cases covered by the Commission returns the export prices have ruled lower than those charged to home consumers.

On this basis the amount of goods sold cheaper abroad, instead of amounting to $4,000,000, would amount to about $100,000,000.

But the returns referred to by the Commission were most inadequate. Of 2,000 schedules only 416 replies were received, and these only from corporations not popularly known as trusts. If one-fifth of the replies received indicated a percentage of 20 per cent, it is safe to say that the other four-fifths, representing to the greatest degree the trusts of the country, will furnish the additional 65 per cent, making 85 per cent of the total export of manufactured goods sold abroad at prices cheaper than at home.

Henry Rossell & Co., of Sheffield, England, represent that 4-inch flat files, which sell in the United States at 92 cents a dozen, sell in England at 34 cents, a difference of 170 per cent; half round 4-inch files, to Americans, $1.20, to Englishmen, 34 cents; difference, 250 per cent. From these figures we see that the American File Association, from November 1, 1899, to date, has been charging Americans from two to three times as much as it charges Englishmen. The Iron Age of December 17, 1903, showed that the shovel trust sold shovels in South Africa at 36 cents apiece and charged Americans 90 cents apiece for the same goods. The same paper on November 12 showed that American steel beams, plates, angles, channels, and rivets steel were being sold in Canada at from $9 to $11 per ton less than was charged at home. The same paper showed that the steel trust were offering steel billets in England at $14 per ton, while its price on the same date to Americans was $23 per ton.

When the Congressional Merchant Marine Commission, the father of the present subsidy bill, which has just passed the Senate, was sitting in Cleveland, Mr. James E. Wallace, of the American Shipbuilding Company, said that American steel was being sold at Belfast at $24 per ton, while the same steel in Pittsburg was sold for $32 per ton. The chairman of the Commission exclaimed, "If that's so it is an outrage and ought to be remedied." [Applause.] His remedy appears to be not a revision of the tariff rate, which would make such a condition impossible, but a subsidy to shipbuilders by which the American people may be taxed to make up the outrageous loss occasioned by this difference in price to the American shipbuilder.

When the Commission sat in New York, J. J. Hill stated that Canadian railroads were buying steel rails of the steel trust at $10 a ton cheaper than his road could buy them. Mr. James T. Wright, vice-president and general manager of the Macon, Dublin and Savannah Railroad Company, in a letter to Senator BACON, which was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on April 25, 1904, said that he was forced to pay $29 a ton for 5,000 tons of steel rails for American use, while the same company offered to sell him rails delivered on board steamer for Honduras at $20 a ton.

The report of the Chamberlain tariff commission (a commission made up of about sixty business men of Great Britain) is brim full of instances showing that the policy of selling American goods abroad cheaper than at home, instead of being exceptional, is the rule. The tariff of the United States is high enough not only to monopolize the home market but to sell all the surplus manufactures to foreigners at rates averaging from 30 to 50 per cent less than the same goods are sold at home.

In view of these facts is it strange that the producers throughout the country are demanding a revision of the tariff and the regulation of the railroad rates? The issue is up to the Republican party. You have every branch of the Government, the House of Representatives, the Senate, and the President. Will you grant relief? If not the people will and ought to hurl you from power and take the Government from your control and restore it to the control of the party of the people, the Democratic party. The eyes of the country are upon you, and you can not longer satisfy the people with promises to revise the tariff and promises to control and regulate the corporations. Will you meet the issue and give the people relief, or will you "stand pat" before the gathering cyclone and be destroyed?

Time will tell, and I leave the issue with you for your consideration, and for your account to be rendered to the American people. [Prolonged applause.]

I append herewith, as part of my remarks, the communications from the Department of Agriculture, the Navy Department, and the War Department to which I have referred:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 16, 1906.

SIR: In response to the request contained in your letter of 14th instant, I transmit herewith a statement showing the amount of War Department appropriations since the conclusion of the Spanish-American war, embracing the civil establishment, military establishment (support of Army and Military Academy), public works (including fortifications and river and harbor improvements), and miscellaneous objects, also the amount of appropriations each year since the conclusion of the Spanish-American war for the maintenance of the military establishment (support of Army and Military Academy).

It would be impossible to separate and show the exact amounts expended from these appropriations for insular possessions without entailing an amount of work too large to be undertaken with the present clerical force, especially during this very busy season.

Very respectfully,

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Acting Secretary of War.

Hon. E. S. CANDLER, Jr.,
House of Representatives.

Amount of War Department appropriations since conclusion of the Spanish-American war, embracing civil establishment, military establishment (support of Army and Military Academy), public works (including fortifications and river and harbor improvements), and miscellaneous objects.

1900	$119,235,266.23
1901	166,434,660.36
1902	142,141,949.26
1903	192,913,660.63
1904	112,436,177.67
1905	107,519,168.89
Total	840,680,883.04

Amount of appropriations each year since conclusion of the Spanish-American war, for the maintenance of the military establishment (support of Army and Military Academy).

1900	$93,993,815.16
1901	118,346,687.94
1902	117,436,831.80
1903	96,473,528.10
1904	74,392,029.34
1905	77,355,162.80
Total	577,998,055.14

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not enjoy the honor of being a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and yet I desire to trespass upon the time of the House for a few minutes this afternoon in supplementing the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] in calling the attention of this House somewhat in detail to the work which has been accomplished by the Department of Agriculture during the past nine years. We of Iowa regard the Department of Agriculture as something of an Iowa institution, and we are proud of it. A simple recital of the facts of the accomplishments of this Department during the past nine years is proof positive that the money appropriated in this bill brings to the country far greater returns in the production of wealth and multiplication of industries than from any other money expended by the National Government.

THE WEATHER BUREAU.

I need not discuss at length the work of the Weather Bureau, as that is quite familiar to all, although it may not be generally remembered that this Bureau, through its experiments, has developed one of the best wireless telegraph systems now in use. The Weather Bureau is a great system, with thousands of agents and observers in every State in the Union and in the outlying possessions, who make a business of studying conditions and forecasting the weather, and issuing daily forecasts, storm warnings, and flood signals for the benefit of agriculture, commerce, and navigation.

The Bureau keeps a record of the weather, temperature, and rainfall in every part of the country, and this information is invaluable not only for the homeseeker, but in the development of arid and semiarid regions through irrigation.

All in all, the results accomplished by the Weather Bureau for the benefit of the farmer, the mariner, the shipper, the manufacturer, and the seeker after health or pleasure prove that there is no weather service in the world to compare with it.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

But there are other bureaus in that Department which appeal more to the imagination and to the interest of the public. There is the Bureau of Animal Industry, whose work is of great value to the country, dealing as it does with the study of the contagious diseases of live stock and making original investigations as to their control and prevention.

As an example of the efficient work in this line, they stamped out a dangerous epidemic of "blackleg" which prevailed among the cattle of the Southwest a few years ago, entailing heavy losses. At that time the Bureau, after a series of experiments, discovered a vaccine which produced immunity by a single vaccination. This vaccine was generously distributed, with the result that the loss from "blackleg" of 10 to 20 per cent has been rapidly reduced, until now this dread disease has almost disappeared, thus saving millions of dollars to the cattle raisers of the country.

In like manner they eradicated an outbreak of the "foot-and-mouth" disease among the cattle, hogs, and sheep, which appeared in New England and threatened to spread over the entire country. By most energetic measures, which involved the slaughter of infected animals, this contagion was completely stamped out, after a campaign which stands unrivaled in celerity, economy, and satisfactory results.

Two years ago disaster faced the cattle herds of the whole country from mange. Infection on the western ranges threatened to spread over the entire country, many infected animals having been found in the important central markets. The Department stepped in with regulations preventing interstate shipments of infected cattle. In 1904 it made an inspection of 4,000,000 head and last year of over 14,000,000. By this plan of inspecting and by prescribing dipping for those affected, the ravages of this disease have been effectively checked. They are now making investigations and experiments with regard to Texas fever, hog cholera, and tuberculosis, and from the discoveries already made it seems likely that knowledge will be acquired that will eventually result in the control and prevention of these diseases.

But this Bureau, Mr. Chairman, has charge of another phase of work which is of the very highest importance to the meat producers of the country. It has built up a system whereby our herds are being protected against the importation of infected animals from abroad. And what is of still greater importance, it has full charge of the subject of the inspection of dressed meat. Upon the success of this branch of the work depends a foreign trade worth many millions of dollars annually to our stock raisers. Our meat products would be barred from many of the markets of the world if it were not that these meats bear the certification of Government inspection, and foreign countries have confidence that this inspection is thorough and efficient.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I am reading now a book called "The Jungle," by Mr. St. Clair, giving a description of the work and life in the packing-house district in Chicago, and he states plainly and squarely that, while the export meats of this country are inspected, the diseased cattle are slaughtered for home consumption, and that rejected cattle are slaughtered and put on the domestic market. Does the gentleman know anything in regard to that?

Mr. DAWSON. I do not. I understand this is a book of fiction, and should be treated as such.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to say to the gentleman from Connecticut that that information is absolutely erroneous.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The statement is emphatically made in the book.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, it is emphatically wrong.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I will refer the gentleman to the hearings before the committee. Doctor Melville is explicit upon that point. As the chairman of the committee has said, absolutely there is no opportunity for diseased meat to be sold to the American people.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. DAWSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. Isn't this true, that local slaughterhouses may kill beef for sale without inspection?

Mr. DAWSON. I believe that is true.

Mr. MURDOCK. And such meat possibly might be diseased.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is absolutely impossible to inspect every little slaughterhouse in the country.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; and meat might be sold from that local slaughterhouse which might be infected, but no meat could be exported except that which was inspected.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, I was alluding to the importance of this service as regards the exportation of meats. The foreign countries have such confidence in the efficiency and excellence of this service that our meats are admitted without question. Such a high standard has been fixed for the inspection of cattle and dressed meats that we are able to sell annually more than $200,000,000 worth abroad. The importance of this inspection service can not be too highly estimated and, as Secretary Wilson points out in his report, "the withdrawal or even the restriction of our ability to supply such certification would mean the utter annihilation of our foreign trade in cattle and meat products."

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY.

There is another bureau of the Department of Agriculture that has a great interest to me, at least, and that is the Bureau of Entomology, sometimes referred to as the "Bureau of Bugology." Some sneers have been directed against this bureau, but I believe the House will better appreciate its importance when I call their attention to the fact that the annual loss to our staple crops from destructive insects is estimated at $500,000,000. It is the business of this bureau to study these pests and to apply this information to limit and prevent them.

Their greatest task now is to conquer the boll weevil, an insect which attacks the pod of the cotton plant, and whose ravages threatened to deprive the United States of its lead as the greatest cotton-producing country in the world. A vigorous campaign is being waged against this pest, and its ravages have in a large measure been overcome. They have bred new types of the cotton plant that will resist the damage of the weevil, and they have brought from Central America an ant which destroys this destructive insect.

During recent years this bureau has brought a beetle from Asia to destroy the San Jose scale, which threatened the destruction of the apple orchards in the United States; and a parasite from Africa which has practically conquered the black scale, the worst enemy of the orange and lemon trees of California. Now they are bringing from Europe and Japan a natural enemy of the gypsy moth and the brown-tail moth, of which we will hear more, I believe, before this discussion ends. They brought the fig-fertilizing insect from southern Europe and established it in California, with the result that the growing of Smyrna figs has now become a new and profitable industry. They are now making elaborate investigation of the Hessian fly, the chinch bug, grasshoppers, cutworms, and other insects affecting wheat, corn, clover, and similar crops, and in a few years we may hope to lessen the enormous damage done by this class of pests.

BUREAU OF SOILS.

Through the Bureau of Soils it has added uncounted millions to the wealth of the country. By surveys in various sections it has shown what soils are best adapted for the growth of tobacco, apples, sugar beets, alfalfa, rice, corn, cotton, and numerous special crops. Through its work the worn-out soil in many Southern States has been rejuvenated and increased in value many fold. It has designated throughout the country the soils best adapted to special crops, and it has worked out methods whereby the fertility of the soil can be restored and maintained. As an example of the value of this work, I call attention to the fact that the Norfolk sand, which was formerly worth from $5 to $10 an acre, is now worth $100 to $200 per acre, and in some parts of the country soil especially adapted to the growing of grapes has increased in value twenty to thirty fold.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. What do they do with the Norfolk sand?

Mr. DAWSON. By soil survey covering that particular sand, they discovered that it was particularly adapted to the growing of sweet patotoes, melons, and small vegetables.

The soils of the United States constitute the greatest asset of the people, and the Department is teaching the people how to obtain from that soil the largest amount of food products.

BUREAU OF FORESTRY.

Through the Forestry Service of the Department a work of great magnitude and benefit to the country is being accomplished. Our country was suddenly brought to a realization of the fact that the destruction of the forests had reached a point where the end was in sight. The country was rapidly approaching a dangerous crisis in a vital industry—that of the production of lumber. Six years ago the Forestry Service attacked the problem, and through its practical efforts the whole situation has changed. A healthy public sentiment has been created against the wanton destruction of forests. Millions of acres of public lands have been set apart in forest reserves. Practical methods of reforestation have been set in motion, and a continuation of the policy which now prevails will preserve and maintain the timber supply for future needs. In the past seven years this Service has saved enormous wastes and has enriched the country by many millions of dollars by additions to our forest resources.

MISCELLANEOUS BUREAUS.

There are a number of other bureaus of the Department into whose work I can not go in detail. There is a Bureau of Statistics, which issues impartial crop reports, besides collecting and disseminating information concerning foreign markets. Through the work of its special agents abroad much information has been obtained whereby we have been able to largely increase our exportation of agricultural products.

It has accomplished a great practical work on the subject of public-road building, by disseminating expert information as to the construction of roads, by building object-lesson roads, and by the testing of road materials.

Through the Bureau of Chemistry an important work is being done in the inspection of imported foods and in the creation of food standards. All of this varied and valuable information acquired by the Department through the agencies at its command has been widely disseminated throughout the country. Agricultural education has been extended through the agricultural colleges and much information has been diffused through the medium of the Farmers' Institutes. In addition to this, the Division of Publication last year disseminated more than 12,000,000 copies of the Department's reports.

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

One of the most interesting bureaus of the entire Department is the Bureau of Plant Industry. It was here that the navel orange was born several years ago, and only recently they have produced a type of sweet orange hardy enough to withstand the frosts almost as far north as Washington. By the magic science of plant breeding it has produced a long-staple cotton that will rival the Egyptian and the lower grades of sea island; it has brought forth several new varieties of citranges and tangelos; it has produced a pineapple which can be cultivated in Florida. It has bred sugar-beet seed with a single germ in each ball, which will make a profound saving in cultivation. Heretofore beet-sugar seeds contain from one to five germs, which necessitated thinning out the plants. Through the experiments of the Department a ball has been produced which contains the germ of a single beet seed, and when a sufficient quantity of this seed is obtained the cultivation of beets will be almost as simple as the cultivation of corn.

The work of this Bureau has changed the United States from a buyer into a seller of rice. A few years ago we imported many million bushels of rice. Last year we produced in our own country 13,000,000 bushels, enough to supply our own home needs and have some left for export. In like manner the Department is inaugurating and fostering the manufacture of beet sugar, with the result that last year we produced 308,000 tons, ten times as much as we produced ten years ago.

What is true of beet sugar and rice will, in my judgment, ultimately be realized as to tea. We are now paying foreign countries $16,000,000 a year for tea. Experiments conducted by the Department have proved that this can be successfully grown in the United States. Last year the station at Summerville, S. C., produced 9,000 pounds of tea, and before many years have passed I look to see the growing of tea become a great American industry. In like manner the silk industry is being slowly but surely developed. Steps are being taken to produce in our own country the silk for which we are now paying $60,000,000 a year to foreign countries. The activity of the Department has been extended to our insular possessions, where the people are being instructed and encouraged in the production of tropical fruits, nuts, spices, etc., for which we are now paying to foreign nations $200,000,000 a year.

The remote corners of the earth have been searched for new and useful seeds and plants, and by adapting them to particular localities in the United States many new and profitable industries have been developed. It has brought new grasses to the denuded ranges of the Rockies and forest plants to the alkili wastes of the West; it has enabled the semiarid regions of the Northwest to produce last year 20,000,000 bushels of maccaroni wheat; it has introduced successfully the growing of rushes for the manufacture of mattings, which we are now importing in large quantities; it has started the production of American dates on the desert of Arizona; it has brought the citron from Corsica, and the hard-shell almond from Spain; it has obtained hardy corn and oats suited for our northern climate, and improved varieties of potatoes and tobacco; new kinds of barley which will thrive upon the alkali lands of the Southwest; new types of cotton adapted to various conditions in the South, and a thousand other results which are enriching our country, and enabling us to grow at home many things which we have heretofore been buying abroad.

SECRETARY WILSON.

Mr. Chairman, the people of Iowa take a special pride in the fact that the man who for the past nine years has been the directing head of this Department, which has brought such great and far-reaching benefits to all parts of our country, is the Hon. James Wilson, formerly of Iowa [applause], but now of the whole United States. [Applause.] The entire country shares with the people of Iowa in unwavering faith in the ability and the single-minded devotion of Secretary Wilson to the cause of American agriculture. The man who has so increased the productivity of the land, who has made millions of plants grow where none grew before [applause], and who has so increased the national wealth will be set down in history as one of the greatest public benefactors of his age.

Secretary Wilson came into office on March 4, 1897, at the close of four of the leanest and hungriest years that American agriculture has experienced in the present generation. [Applause.] During the nine years from that time until now there has been a steady advance in the well-being and prosperity of American agriculture, as well as all other industries, which is unparalleled in the history of this or any other country. During those years agriculture, our greatest productive industry and the very foundation of the whole prosperity, has gone forward by leaps and bounds, culminating in 1905 with a year of unprecedented production and value.

VALUE OF FARM CROPS.

The crop values for last year are almost past comprehension. King Corn reached its highest production with 2,708,000,000 bushels, a gain of 184,000,000 bushels over the next lower year, 1902. The value of last year's corn crop was $1,116,000,000—a sum equal to the capital stock of all the State and national banks in the United States.

Cotton, including seed, stood second with a production valued at $575,000,000—a sum larger than the total expenditures of the National Government last year.

Third in value is wheat. The wheat crop of last year was the second in size that this country has ever produced and the highest in value, being worth $518,000,000—a sum which exceeds the annual output of all the coal mines of the country by $80,000,000.

Next after wheat comes the hay crop, the value of which amounted to nearly $516,000,000—a sum equal to all the gold coin of Great Britain. The oat crop of last year amounted to $277,000,000—a sum large enough to meet the total annual expenditure for public schools in the United States. The potato crop was worth almost $161,000,000, and the barley crop $55,000,000 more. To this must be added the value of the dairy products of the United States, which amounted last year to $665,000,000—greater in value than any crop but corn.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for an interrogation?

Mr. DAWSON. Very gladly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In what way and how much money is employed in this bill to benefit the dairy division of farming?

Mr. DAWSON. Well, I will have to refer your inquiry to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I would like to ask him while I am on my feet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will answer that when we reach it in the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to know how much money is used in this bill to look after the dairy business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think for the Bureau of Animal Industry—and the dairy division is included in the Bureau of Animal Industry—the apportionment of money is about $25,000 for that purpose.

THE AMERICAN HEN.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, as Secretary Wilson says in his annual report, the American hen is becoming a worthy companion to the cow. As everybody on this floor knows, the raising of poultry is largely incidental to the general business of the farm. And yet the annual production of eggs has reached more than a score of billions, and the poultry products have mounted to place of more than half a billion dollars in value.

We hear a great deal on this floor about the glory of the American eagle, and artists in the past have painted the beauties of the birds of plumage, but, Mr. Chairman, the American hen is entitled to a modest tribute for her industry, her usefulness, and productivity. [Applause.] Why, Mr. Chairman, the American hen can produce——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAWSON. May I have ten minutes more?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman, that he may finish his remarks.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, the American hen can produce wealth equal to the capital stock of all the banks in the New York Clearing House in three months and have a week to spare. [Laughter.] In less than sixty days she can equal the total annual production of all the gold mines in the United States. More than that, the United States proudly boasts of its production of pig iron—far greater than any country in the world—and yet the American hen can produce as much wealth in six months as all the iron mines in the country can produce in a year. Give the American hen one year and ten months and she will pay off the interest-bearing debt of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, these figures of the production of wealth from farm crops, large as they are, tell but little more than half the story. When we add to these the crops which I have not enumerated, the wealth production on the farms of the United States last year reached the stupendous sum of $6,415,000,000, a sum nearly two and one-half times as great as all the money in circulation in our country.

DOMESTIC ANIMALS.

The number of horses in the country on January 1 last was the highest ever known, reaching 18,700,000, with a value of $1,510,000,000, more than $300,000,000 over the next lower year.

Mules increased last year more than 500,000 in number and more than $80,000,000 in value over the preceding year.

Last year broke the record in the number of cattle, and the value reached the enormous total of nearly one and one-third billion dollars.

The value of sheep and swine reached a sum slightly in excess of $500,000,000, thus making the total value of farm animals on January 1 last $3,675,000,000.

INCREASE IN LAND VALUES.

To the wealth produced from farm crops and domestic animals there is still one more item which we must add if we are to tell complete this story of prosperity and happiness. That is the increase in the value of land. The Secretary of Agriculture has gone into this carefully, and he has ascertained that in the grand aggregate of all farms the increased value during the past five years amounted to $6,133,000,000. As he so aptly says in his annual report:

> Every sunset during the past five years has registered an increase of $3,400,000 in the value of the farms in this country. Every month has piled this value upon value until it has reached $102,000,000.

If we add up the value of last year's farm crops, the value of domestic animals on the farms on January 1 last, and the increase in the value of land during the year 1905, we have the stupendous total of $11,316,000,000 as one year's wealth—enough money to buy outright all the railroads in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, marvelous as is this story of the production of the American farms, the disposition and the consumption of these products is also a matter of wonder. Besides supplying the wants of our own 80,000,000 people, the American farmer during the last fiscal year exported farm products to the value of $827,000,000. During the past sixteen years the domestic exports of farm products have amounted to $12,000,000,000, a sum more than $5,000,000,000 in excess of the total imports of all kinds from all countries to the United States during the same period.

During the last census year the raw material which the farmers supplied to the manufacturers of this country amounted to $2,679,000,000—supplied to industries employing 2,154,000 persons. Such are the enormous interests in industries that we could not maintain this without the farmer and his extraordinary productive ability.

What has the American farmer done with this tremendous wealth? If we turn to the banking statistics of the country, we find a large increase in the number of small banks organized throughout the agricultural States. Nearly 2,000 national banks have been organized during the past six years. If we turn to the statistics of the deposits of the country, we read another chapter in this wonderful story. In my own State of Iowa the deposits increased last year 15 per cent, and the same is true of practically all of the States in the North Central division. In the South Central division the figures are even greater, reaching 22.8 per cent. For the first time in the history of the South the banks of that region contain deposits upward of $1,000,000,000. This remarkable increase in bank deposits in agricultural States is due directly and indirectly to the profits which the farmers have taken from the soil.

The progress in production and value during the past nine years is shown by the following tables, compiled from the official records of the Government:

Mr. Chairman, this simple recital of the facts surpasses the wildest dreams of wealth production, and history can furnish nothing to compare with it as a record of progress and development. It is a record which places the American farmer in the front rank of our energetic and progressive citizens. But great as the achievements of the past few years have been, I believe our country will march steadily forward to still greater successes in agricultural production, under the stimulus of increased demand for home consumption and the broadening and extension of our markets abroad.

I thank you. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the free distribution of rare and valuable seeds among the people was, in earlier years, a wise and beneficent measure, but perverted from its original purpose it has become one of the most contemptible grafts permitted under the administration of the Federal Government. It is a striking object lesson, showing how easily a good thing can be converted into a cherished abuse, in this instance firmly intrenched in the average Congressional mind and believed to be a useful gratuity calculated to conciliate and flatter susceptible constituents, although usually frankly acknowledged to be a burden and nuisance.

The origin of this monstrosity as it now exists was most humble. In 1839 Congress was persuaded to appropriate the almost ridiculous sum of $1,000 "to enable the Commissioner of Patents to purchase and distribute new varieties of seeds and publish agricultural statistics." To this small appropriation, infinitesimal when compared with the present appropriation for like purposes of over $7,000,000 annually, both the Department of Agriculture and the free-seed distribution may trace a common parentage. The good and the evil, the benefaction and the parasite, have grown strong together until one is deservedly recognized by a seat in the Cabinet of the President and the other has successfully dominated Congress.

Successive Commissioners and Secretaries of Agriculture have emphatically expressed their disapproval of a Congressional distribution of cheap and common seeds, notably Secretary J. Sterling Morton, of estimable memory, who, finding that a free-seed distribution through Senators and Representatives was not mandatory, and believing it an unwarranted expenditure of public money, ordered that the Department building then occupied for seed distribution be used for other purposes, effectually abolishing the abuse for a time. Secretary Morton firmly adhered to his determination until Congress intervened and ordered the distribution continued, even largely increasing the quantity of seeds distributed.

Secretary Wilson, who, in administering his great Department, has done more for the industrial interests of the United States than any other man of his generation, while loyally complying with the directions of Congress, has not hesitated to condemn the absurdities of the Congressional seed distribution as now conducted. Especially in his annual report for 1903 the present Secretary forcibly expressed his disapproval in words which at this time may well be repeated:

> With regard to the securing and distributing of miscellaneous garden and flower seed, the fact remains that this work does not accomplish the ends for which the law was originally framed. There are collected, put up, and distributed now, on Congressional orders, nearly 40,000,000 packets of miscellaneous vegetable and flower seeds each year. These seeds are the best that can be obtained in the market, but from the fact that large numbers of packets are wanted, the seed obtained can be of standard sorts only, such as are to be found everywhere for sale in the open market. As there is no practical object to be gained in distributing this kind of seed, it seems very desirable that some change be made. To this end it would seem wise to limit our work entirely to the securing and distributing of seeds and plants of new and rare sorts. There is still much to be done in the way of securing seeds, plants, etc., of this kind from abroad, but still more to be accomplished in careful investigations of our own possibilities in this direction. There are many valuable plants scattered all over this country which are still little known outside of their respective localities. These should be collected, tested, and distributed. There are also great possibilities of improving agricultural industries by distributing specially bred seeds and plants.
> As the plant-breeding work of the Department increases, opportunities for securing seed of this nature will accumulate. The Department has a well-organized force of scientists who are thoroughly familiar with the general conditions of soil and climate in nearly all parts of the country. Special crops could be selected for special purposes, and with the advice and cooperation of Members of Congress such crops could be placed where they would do the most good. This is a line of work that would result in very much more value to individual districts throughout the country than the distribution of a large quantity of common varieties of garden seed which have no particular merits, so far as newness or promise are concerned.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You say that these seeds are common?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Secretary Wilson says so.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. His son, who is his private secretary, this morning said to me that a large portion of these seeds were raised, by direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, by certain individuals over the country and bought and distributed as we are distributing seed.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I say they are common, because they can be purchased by anybody at any retail store.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am very sure the Secretary would not direct the raising of common seed that he might buy and distribute them over the country.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I have given you what Secretary Wilson says in his report as to common seeds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I give you what his son said to me; a very large portion of them are raised by direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the gentleman will permit me, each package of seed that is now sent out by Congressmen or Senators has on it a request to the recipient that he give it a trial, and if the trial is successful or otherwise that he report to the Department. Are any such reports made by the recipients of seed?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I have never known of such a report in my experience.

Mr. MURDOCK. Neither have I.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have received several letters recently—I have some of them on file now—asking if the report is to be made to me or to the Secretary of Agriculture. They are from the very best men in Tennessee, men who are running fine farms and some who are running farms that are not fine, asking whether they shall report to the Secretary of Agriculture or myself on this seed.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did they report?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The seed has not come up yet. They have only been planted a short time, and I do not know what their character will be yet.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I happen to have, if the gentleman from Connecticut will permit me to make a suggestion, an official statement in regard to the question now propounded by my colleague, and it is that out of something over 7,000,000 packages sent out last year about 1,000 reports were returned to the Department.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I might add that some four years ago the Secretary did secure some small quotas of rare seeds. I think every Member of the House four years ago had 500 packages of really rare seed. I was very much pleased to send mine out. I do not send out my usual quota, but I was told at the expiration of the year, when the suggestion was made that the quantity be increased, that Members declined to send out these really rare and valuable seeds because it was an unfair discrimination between their constituents, and for that reason the Department had thousands of packages of these seeds remain on their hands.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the Secretary is authorized after the 1st of April to distribute them, and he sent me some packages, and I am glad to get them and send them to everybody, without regard to race or color or previous condition of servitude, which I have always done, and will continue to do, if I get the chance.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I hope not, but you may.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope to get it, for I want the farmers to have a little chance.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Now to proceed:

It should be understood that even if the House approves of the recommendations of the Committee on Agriculture the distribution of really valuable seeds will not be affected.

The Government seed collection and distribution covers an extensive field of work, extending over the entire habitable globe, and is classified by the Department in three distinct groups:

First. The securing, handling, and distributing of miscellaneous garden and flower seeds, grapevines, strawberry plants, ornamentals, etc.

Second. The securing and distributing of comparatively new or little-known kinds of various field and forage crop seeds, such as cotton, corn, alfalfa, etc.; the improvement of the same by breeding and selection, and the general upbuilding of agricultural industries through such work.

Third. The introduction and dissemination of new and promising seeds and plants from foreign countries and the building up of new industries as the result of the work.

Only the first-named group will be affected by the proposed legislation. For this group alone your committee refuse to stand sponsors. Group 2, which includes all important investigations in breeding new plants and disseminating valuable types of cotton, tobacco, corn, cereals, forage crops, etc., as well as group 3, embracing the discovery and introduction of promising foreign fruits, vegetables, plants, grasses, etc., will still continue to receive the attention of the trained experts of the Bureau of Plant Industry, under the able supervision of Dr. B. T. Galloway.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman tell how long we have been raising corn in the United States?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I think it was one of the things our forefathers found when they came here. We are told that the pilgrim fathers lived partly on parched corn during their first winter after landing on Plymouth Rock.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And yet that is one of the things that you would have the Secretary spend our money on and distribute throughout the country.

And if we had had Uncle Sam and he had any garden seed, they would have been asking for us to give it to them, as we are giving them to our people. Now, I want to say, my friend, nearly everybody in my country has seed corn, and they are willing to trade seed corn for garden seed.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. No, I would not distribute corn, and I am glad there is one thing my distinguished friend believes Uncle Sam does not need to purchase and distribute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am a strict constructionist. I will say that seed is about all the farmer gets; under the laws you have made it all goes to the trusts. The trusts have got everything in the United States by the throat except the sale of seed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Except GAINES. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And they never will get him, and if they did get him by the throat, hand, or feet he would give them what Paddy gave the drum.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Perhaps I may now be allowed to continue my remarks and say that all that is of real value in seed collection and distribution will be retained and only the comparatively valueless will be eliminated, should the recommendation of your committee be approved by the House. The reform will be attended with slight injury to the farmer or purchaser of seeds, and it will give material encouragement to the great seed-producing industry of the country. Moreover, it is an all around equitable deal, which certainly will meet with popular approval.

I have received from the Secretary of Agriculture a carefully compiled report in detail of expenditures made and required during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, for purchasing, handling, and distributing seeds classified in the three designated groups to which I have referred.

I will, for the information of the House and of the country, attach this statement to my remarks, to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

It will be observed that an annual saving of over $130,000 in the cost of seeds alone can be made if the House approves the recommendation of its committee. In addition to this not inconsequential sum, an economy of more than $30,000 will be effected in the postal revenues should the free distribution of common varieties of seeds be abandoned.

That the distribution of this class of seeds is not approved or desired by a majority of the farmers throughout the country is demonstrated by numerous resolutions, adopted by national, State, and local granges, protesting against a continuance of what is called a "fraud" in copies of some of these resolutions received by members of the Committee on Agriculture.

Should further evidence be required of the unpopularity of the cheap-seed distribution, it may be found in the general symposium of protests made by the press in all parts of the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You can put in one from my State, if you want to.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Probably the gentleman knows more about the wishes of his State than I do.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I can read that editorial and get more votes on every position that I have taken in this House than anyone who reads it and disagrees with me.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I hope the gentleman will read the editorial and secure the votes. We should miss his genial presence in this body, which he graces and adorns.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not care whether I secure any votes by any position I take on this question. I do what I think is right, and in this case I am going to vote for seed to help down this infamous trust business that is in this country. This is the only thing that is not in a trust.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I am glad to learn that the free distribution of seed is killing the trusts. There ought to be some good in what appears to me to be a graft.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly. The Government gives away a few seeds in this country, and it has kept down the seed trust at least partially if not entirely.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I wish the gentleman will now allow me to finish; my time is promised.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. With the permission of the House, I will also insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a few quotations from leading newspapers in widely separated localities. A careful reading of these clippings seemingly ought to convince even the most obdurate Representative that his constituents are not all demanding free seeds, but rather that a healthy public sentiment is insisting upon a much-needed reform.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, yielding half an hour to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON].

The matter referred to is as follows:

Memorandum of expenditures from the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, 1906, as shown by financial statements to March 12, and estimates to June 30, 1906.

1. THE SECURING, HANDLING, AND DISTRIBUTION OF MISCELLANEOUS GARDEN AND FLOWER SEEDS, ETC.

Cost of seed:
Congressional vegetable and flower seed only	$63,072.67
Other seeds and plants entering into regular quotas, such as cotton, tobacco, lawn grass, etc	6,915.00
Seeds and orange trees not in regular quotas, but purchased for distribution through Congressmen	3,685.00
Plants, chiefly ornamentals, not in regular quotas, but to be distributed through Congressmen	5,704.50
Total	79,377.17
Contract for all work connected with the packeting and mailing of 35,815,000 packets of miscellaneous vegetable and flower seed, including making the packets, printing and filling the same, putting on franks, assembling, and filling packages with packets, at contract price of $1 per 1,000 packets	36,000.00
Salaries of superintendent, bookkeepers, and frank counters	7,645.33
Trial grounds, to test and determine the quality of seeds	2,540.00
Miscellaneous, including freight on all seeds, rent, telegraph, telephone, gas and electric lighting, fuel, etc	7,192.23
Total	132,754.73

2. THE SECURING AND DISTRIBUTING OF COMPARATIVELY NEW OR LITTLE-KNOWN KINDS OF VARIOUS FIELD AND FORAGE CROP SEEDS AND THE IMPROVEMENT OF SAME BY BREEDING.

Purchase of seeds, expense of experimental work, including travel for inspection and supervision		$14,450.33
Maintenance of propagating houses, trial grounds, cooperative work with State experiment stations and private growers throughout the country in establishing new plant industries, and necessary expenses connected therewith of a miscellaneous character		11,049.00
Salaries:
Botanist in charge of entire seed work and assistants	$9,272.17
Experts and laborers required in connection with seeds and plants for experimental work	8,419.67
Experts and gardeners for propagating work, trial grounds, and cooperative investigations	8,306.00
		25,997.84
Miscellaneous, including fuel, gas and electric lighting, stationery, and general office expenses		10,394.33
Balance, not allotted to date, but will probably be required to meet unforeseen expenses before the end of the fiscal year		6,493.77
Total		72,385.27
Total domestic seed work		205,140.00

3. THE INTRODUCTION AND DISSEMINATION OF NEW AND PROMISING SEEDS AND PLANTS FROM FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Purchase of seeds and plants in foreign countries, including travel expenses of explorers and special agents in connection therewith	$16,312.31
Salaries of explorers, experts, special agents, clerks, and laborers in connection with foreign introductions	13,049.00
Preliminary tests of foreign introductions in cooperation with State experiment stations and private growers	3,176.00
Miscellaneous, including telegraph, express, storage, packing, etc	1,000.00
Balance not yet specifically allotted, but which will probably be required for unforeseen expenses	4,242.69
Total foreign seed introductions	37,780.00
Total appropriation for seed and plant introduction and distribution	242,920.00

Summary of principal items of interest.

	Amount.	Per cent of total.
Cost of seeds and plants, including freight	$118,767.16	48.8
Packeting, assembling, and mailing under contract	36,000.00	14.8
Salaries: Botanist in charge, explorers, experts, special agents, clerks, gardeners, laborers, messengers, etc	46,692.17	19.2
Testing, trial grounds, cooperative tests of new plants with experiment stations and private growers, including travel expenses	16,765.00	6.9
Miscellaneous, including telegraph, telephone, fuel, gas and electric lighting, stationery, and general office expenses	13,959.21	5.8
Balance yet to be allotted	10,736.46	4.5
Total	242,920.00	100.0

From the foregoing it will be seen that approximately 49 per cent of the total appropriation is actually expended for the purchase of seeds, 15 per cent for packeting and mailing, 19 per cent for salaries, 7 per cent for testing and trial work, and 6 per cent for miscellaneous and office expenses, leaving a balance of 4 per cent for emergencies. The combined cost of all salaries, miscellaneous and general office expenses, including telegraph, amounts to $60,651.88, or approximately 25 per cent of the total, leaving $182,268.12, or 75 per cent of the entire appropriation as the net amount to be expended for the purchase of seeds, testing, and distribution.

In addition to the foregoing, attention should be called to the appropriation for salaries on the statutory roll of the Bureau of Plant Industry (Estimates of Appropriations, 1907, p. 87). The entire appropriation under this item is $162,480, of which $42,040, or approximately 25 per cent, is chargeable to the seed work. These salaries were formerly paid from the lump fund, but last year the Committee on Agriculture decided to make them statutory. Following is a list of all these clerks, together with their salaries and the line of work to which they are directly chargeable:

1. The securing, handling, and distribution of miscellaneous garden and flower seeds, etc.

Designation.	Number.	Rate.	Amount.
Clerks:
Class 4	2	$1,800.00	$3,600.00
Class 3	1	1,600.00	1,600.00
Class 2	1	1,400.00	1,400.00
Class 1	2	1,200.00	2,400.00
Clerks	3	1,000.00	3,000.00
Clerk	1	840.00	840.00
Clerks	5	720.00	3,600.00
Clerk	1	600.00	600.00
Plant packer	1	660.00	660.00
Skilled laborer	1	660.00	660.00
Messengers	2	480.00	960.00
Total	20		19,320.00

2. The securing and distributing of comparatively new or little known kinds of various field and forage crop seeds and the improvement of same by breeding.

Designation.	Number.	Rate.	Amount.
Clerks:
Class 2	1	$1,400.00	$1,400.00
Class 1	3	1,200.00	3,600.00
Clerks	2	1,000.00	2,000.00
Clerk	1	900.00	900.00
Clerks	3	840.00	2,520.00
Do	5	720.00	3,600.00
Clerk	1	600.00	600.00
Gardener	1	900.00	900.00
Do	1	660.00	660.00
Skilled laborer	1	660.00	660.00
Skilled laborers	4	600.00	2,400.00
Messenger boy	1	360.00	360.00
Total	24		19,540.00

3. The introduction and dissemination of new and promising seeds and plants from foreign countries.

Designation.	Number.	Rate.	Amount.
Clerk, class 1	1	$1,200.00	$1,200.00
Clerk	1	720.00	720.00
Gardener	1	660.00	660.00
Skilled laborer	1	600.00	600.00
Total	4		3,180.00

Total statutory salaries connected with seed work $42,040.00

From the foregoing it appears that the total cost of the seed work, including the regular appropriation and the amount expended for statutory salaries, is $284,960, or $5,040 less than the amount appropriated for the same purpose last year. The combined lump fund and statutory salaries this year amount to $88,732.17, or approximately 31 per cent of the entire cost of the seed work.

To properly handle such subjects we have a number of testing stations where crops when first brought in are grown for a time, and if found valuable are propagated extensively and distributed. The men in charge of these stations must be experts and must be thoroughly familiar with the propagation of plants and the necessary requirements for making such plants successful in other regions.

This statement in reference to the manner in which the work is handled seems desirable and necessary in order that a better understanding may be had of the accompanying summarized table of expenditures.

Very respectfully, JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

[State, Columbia, S. C., March 8, 1906.]

SEEDS FOR THE DEAR PEOPLE.

Is it possible that the present wave of antigraft sentiment is to sweep from the face of the earth that dearest of old grafts and humbugs, the free distribution of seeds by Congress? We can scarcely believe it, and yet if the House does not reverse the action of the Committee on Agriculture this tie that binds the Congressman to his dear people will be rudely severed.

[Post, Washington, D. C., March 14, 1906.]

GOVERNMENT SEEDS.

One of the earliest abuses to spring up under the sway of the Federal Government was the distribution of seeds. The country at the time was much more agricultural, as a whole, than it is now, and very few politicians held their positions without the votes of farmers. It was the fashion, and still is to some extent, to set them apart in a class by themselves as especially worthy of consideration and as entitled to privileges and immunities accorded to none other. Needless to say, there have been every year bushels of worthless seed distributed that never came to anything, still other bushels that were never planted, and that there have never been any benefits to anyone at all commensurate with the vast expense involved. Not only so, but there has never been under our system of government any possible justification for such expenditure. There is just as much reason why every farmer should be furnished with a fresh stock of cattle in the spring to improve the breed, or a new set of tools, or every lawyer be presented with the statutes, or everyone else supplied with the implements of his trade or profession as that a farmer should be given his garden seeds. There have been attempts made from time to time to do away with the practice, and this year, at last, the Committee on Agriculture, by one majority, has voted to leave any provision for seed out of the appropriation bill. There is little reason to believe that the farmers of the country will regret or resent the nonarrival of the few seed packages they have been accustomed to receive, and it is a matter of congratulation that at least one hoary and time-honored abuse has been abolished.

[American Agriculturist, March 21, 1906.]

If proper action is taken right now, the free-seed humbug will be killed. It hasn't a leg to stand on, nor has there been a single argument in many years for a continuance of this miserable graft upon the people. Nobody really wants its perpetuity. The Secretary of the Department of Agriculture is utterly opposed to it, the National Grange has thundered against it time and again, various other farmers' organizations have made commendable effort to have it abolished. Finally, the self-respecting farmer has no use for the system. Instead, he very properly resents the cheap effort of his Congressman to curry favor by sending a measly package of the most ordinary kind of seeds, hoping in this way to win a vote. The Government has no more business to furnish free seeds than free overcoats or free horseshoes.

[Traveler, Boston, Mass., March 7, 1906.]

Free seeds are one of the last petty perquisites of Members. Each year they receive a vast quantity for distribution among their constituents. Many of the seeds sent out are never planted, while in some instances farmers and gardeners have got to depend on the annual contribution from the Government. The annual seed distribution has been one of the most vexatious problems of many a Congressman's career. Generally the Member does not receive enough seeds to go around, and if his predecessor was enough of a trader he has established the precedent of sending some to all his constituents. Secretaries to Congressmen will welcome the abolition of free seeds, as it will save them from having to address each year from 4,000 to 10,000 slips to be pasted on seed packets.

[The Sun, New York City, March 11, 1906.]

The House Committee on Agriculture has struck out the item for free seed distribution from the agricultural bill. It is contended that the distribution by Congressmen of free seeds is used to uphold the political fabric of their households. Originally the idea was a good one, as it gave opportunities to experiment with the growing of vegetables of new varieties in various soils and climates and find out their actual value and their adaptation to varying conditions. Each grower was requested to make report to the Department of his success. Instead the thrifty and practical farmer grabbed the free seed and neglected to inform the generous Department at Washington as to the results.

[Statesman, Austin, Tex., March 20, 1906.]

THE FREE-SEED MEASURE.

The present trouble confronting Congress as to whether or not we should have any free-seed distribution at the hands of that body seems to have terminated in a universal verdict that the free seeds must go and that the people shall be spared this expense. The Government has no business furnishing free seeds, and the evils arising from this practice are self-evident to anyone who gives the matter any thought and attention. The granges and other farmers' organizations have invariably passed strong resolutions against this measure. Certainly heed should be given all this clamor. If not in the interest of the public in general, then in the interest of the taxpayer in particular. Reform is most certainly needed here as well as in many other departments of the Government.

[Journal, Providence, R. I.]

All Congressmen are not demagogues, of course; in fact, it is safe to say the majority of them are not, but yet they are very careful not to miss a trick, especially in an election year like this, by relinquishing in the slightest degree the hold they may have upon the voters of their respective districts. * * * It is not so much the amount of money that the honest-minded people of the country care for as the principle involved in the cheap method of vote getting. Let the Congressmen attend to the legitimate duties for which they are sent to Washington and let the farmer buy his seed.

[News, Buffalo, N. Y., March 17, 1906.]

THE FUSS ABOUT FREE SEEDS.

The free-seed distribution was an excellent idea in its origin. It has been of vast service to the people. If it is carried too far now for the best results, the thing to do is to bring the practice back to its first intent and habit. In that way the admirable purpose of those who began the policy of seed distribution may be carried out with general approval. Let us restore the primary policy of the Government before we get too far away from it.

[Advertiser, Montgomery, Ala., March 15, 1906.]

ABOLISH THE FARCE.

The truth of the matter is that this free-seed business is something of a humbug. It has outlived its usefulness, if it ever really had any. Any kind of seeds, rare or common, good, bad, or indifferent, are gathered in by the Department of Agriculture and turned over to the Members of Congress to be sown among the people. The Congressmen do not know what kind of stuff they are sending out and the people who get the seeds care very little about them. It is high time this useless waste of the public money was stopped. We hope Alabama's Congressmen will join with those who are trying to relieve the Government.

[Journal, Kansas City, Mo., March 10, 1906.]

DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

As a matter of fact, the free distribution of seeds has outlived its original purpose and usefulness, and probably not half a dozen Congressmen in the whole House have any idea what they are sending to the farmers. And the farmers themselves have long since ceased to rely upon this governmental gratuity for any real benefit. The custom is only a survival of an antiquated practice that is a needless expense to the Government and of no material good to the farmers. The appropriation for free seeds could be used to better advantage in other directions, and thus bring some real benefit to agriculture. With the money that could be saved by cutting off this ancient custom really "new and valuable" seeds could be imported from foreign countries, and, better still, the products peculiar to localities in this country could be distributed to districts of similar soil and climate for propagation there.

[Tribune, Sioux City, Iowa.]

A CONGRESSIONAL EXTRAVAGANCE.

The action of the Department of Agriculture in opposing the purchase and free distribution of flower and garden seeds is something to be noticed. The Department of Agriculture sends them out through the post-office deadhead, but the post-office has to pay the railroads and pay the clerks and mail carriers who handle the innumerable packages. The real farmers of the country, strange as it may seem, are not those who demand these little bunches of free seeds. In their farm organizations the free-seed extravagance has been generally condemned. Amateur farmers and gardeners may harass Congressmen for them, but the genuine farmer has little use for them and can not but regard the whole expenditure as of little practical value.

[Republic, St. Louis, Mo., March 17, 1906.]

THE FREE-SEED HUMBUG.

In the crude days of agricultural development there may have been a shadow of utility in the practice of sending out free seeds from Washington to the constituents of Senators and Congressmen. Now there is nothing but the persistence of a foolish old habit. The Government buys seeds which a farmer can buy anywhere, and distributes them in little lots to people who usually care nothing about them. It is not much better than a cheap farce, maintained only under a theory that such a petty artifice of sop satisfies the farmer vote. The United States Government should get rid of the antiquated nonsense.

[Herald, Titusville, Pa., March 10, 1906.]

TO DISCONTINUE FREE SEEDS.

The free-seed distribution, looked upon by many as a species of petty graft, seems to be doomed. There have been sporadic attempts to do away with the free-seed distribution, but these efforts have always failed, not because Members of Congress favor the practice, but on account of the objections which it was feared might be raised by their constituents. The present action of the committee has been very largely in response to resolutions adopted by the State Grange of Illinois, New York, and Connecticut, urging that the free-seed distribution be stopped.

[Chronicle, Houston, Tex., March 16, 1906.]

THE FREE-SEED GRAFT.

For many years the press paragraphers, the people's sharpshooters, have attacked that form of petty graft known as the "Congressional free-seed distribution." Many a paper pellet of the brain, witty, ironical, keenly sarcastical, has been fired at the solons responsible therefor, who have forgotten the story of Diogenes and his lantern. The free-seed distribution doesn't do any good. The farmers do not want it. Many men, women, and children throughout the country get these free seeds who do not plant them. The free-seed distribution is part graft and part waste. It is, besides, a postal evil.

[Illinois State Register, Springfield, Ill., March 20, 1906.]

FREE-SEED FOLLY.

This free-seed outrage is being generally condemned, and justifiably so. This thing of sending out little packages of seeds, which, in nine out of ten cases, perhaps, go to people who never use them, is an antiquated and very foolish habit. We do not believe that the farmers, or anyone else, receive sufficient benefit from this costly and unnecessary department to warrant the expenditure of the vast sums of money it involves.

[The Hour, Norwalk, Conn., March 17, 1906.]

THE FREE-SEED GRAFT.

As a matter of fact, the free distribution of seeds is one of the most expensive and most unnecessary of the Government's extravagances. The benefit derived from the distribution of seeds, even those of good quality and for the purpose of introducing new and useful varieties of vegetables and plants, does not in any degree justify the expenditure that the Government makes, and which should certainly be discontinued.

[Courier, Evansville, Ind., March 7, 1906.]

NO MORE SEED DISTRIBUTION.

The absurdities of the system are well illustrated by the fact that a Congressman from a Bowery district in New York City is allowed an equal share of seeds for distribution with a Congressman hailing from a purely agricultural region. The free-seed distribution is therefore a useless expense to the Government. It is a form of class legislation that is pernicious and inflicts distinct injury on the very worthy and important seed trade of the country.

[Union, New Haven, Conn., March 13, 1906.]

WILSON ON FREE SEED.

Secretary Wilson compares the "graft" seed distribution with that which is recognized as legitimate and proper. "There is no doubt," he says, "but that although the amount that is expended distinctly for this work of introducing and developing new crops is relatively but a small proportion of the entire appropriation, the relative amount of good done by this branch of the work is far in excess of that accomplished by the mere distribution of miscellaneous standard varieties of vegetable and flower seeds, which can be purchased from any seedsman."

[Richmond (Va.) Times Dispatch, March 11, 1906.]

The free seed distribution is an outrageous perversion of the original act, which provided that, as a means of promoting the agricultural interests of the country, new and valuable seeds and plants should be distributed in limited quantity. This enactment was not designed, as everybody knows, and none better than Congressmen themselves, to authorize the free distribution of all sorts of ordinary seeds, which farmers can either grow themselves or purchase from dealers. It is an abuse of privilege, a species of graft, and it should be abolished.

[Toledo Blade.]

NO HALFWAY MEASURES.

Congressmen who insist on continuing the Government seed distribution, to be consistent, should also see that their constituents are furnished free hoes and garden rakes.

Mr. LAMB. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as an original proposition I feel satisfied that I could not see my way clear to agree that the Government of the United States go into what you might term the "business" of supplying its citizens with garden and farm seed. I propose to fight the formation of a seed trust by continuing the free distribution of seed to the farmers. That is the major point I have in mind, and I shall discuss it later on. I shall not stop to discuss why I am opposed to the Government giving out these seed as an original proposition. I have not time, and it would not do any good if I had. I want to get down to the issue before me. I feel I am forced to fight the devil with fire. Free distribution of seed will deter a seed trust. That is my main point.

The committee has reported a bill here wholly unlike any bill that has been reported for a number of years. I believe the report states that the appropriation has been "tolerated," and "without authority of law." It is a remarkably late hour, Mr. Chairman, for Congress to say that Congress has no power to make this appropriation. Are you short of money again?

I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, why the committee comes so squarely out against the proposition, and all at once. I do not think, in the nine years that I have been a Member of Congress, I have ever heard of the committee leaving out this appropriation. I think possibly it has been increased since I have been a Member of Congress; and why are you abruptly dropping the seed question? I can not understand. Now, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], who is the senior member in service on the Democratic side of the Agricultural Committee, has just informed me that there was no one before the committee against free seed. And I presume by that, my friend [addressing Mr. LAMB], nobody came before the committee and requested you to drop this provision for seed out of the bill. Yet, gentlemen, here it comes all at once. How did you get it out? How did this proposition become so vulnerable all at once? What is the matter?

Ah, they say, they want "rare seed;" and my good friend from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] says we must furnish corn and tobacco seed free. Why, my dear friend, we have had tobacco and corn ever since we have had civilization on American soil. He may have not had corn bread to eat, and, if not, I am very sorry for him. If he had been fed on corn bread, as I was very largely, I am glad to say, he would stand very much nearer to the farmer in this matter than he does.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know you are a good friend to the farmer, and I said so in your country, in February last—some complimentary things of you that will help you to be reelected. [Laughter.]

Where does the Department get these seed? It appears in the hearings of the Agricultural Committee, on page 232, that this question is answered. Somebody was asking, I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] started the inquiry about how the Department got these seed, and Mr. Galloway, the faithful writer of many letters to me and others upon the question of seed, answered and said:

> I do not see how anyone who took the ordinary precautions with the seed we send out could help from getting good results. We send out seed that must necessarily be better than the ordinary seed that the seedsmen can secure.

That reminds me of a noted lawsuit that occurred in my State. By the way, one occurred of the same kind in Connecticut, and, strange to say, the Connecticut court decided one way and the court in Tennessee decided the other way, and they both thought they were right. They reached different conclusions.

A man in Connecticut went to a potato store to buy, and thought he did buy, Early Rose potatoes, and took them home and found that they were "late potatoes," and they "all went to vine." That is the only thing I ever heard of in Connecticut that "went to vine." The court allowed damages in that case. We had the same kind of a case in Tennessee. Some of my neighbors called for and bought some Early Rose potatoes, and they turned out to be late potatoes, and these "all went to vine," and the supreme court of Tennessee decided that the damages, if any, were "speculative damages," and dismissed the case.

Now, sir, I have not heard of that sort of a suit or loss for years and years. Some one has improved seed potatoes that much, and we have taken the question of a farmer being outraged by bad seed out of the hands of the courts and put it in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and the farmer with his rake and his hoe. We have done that much good. Now, what else did Mr. Galloway say? I believe the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] asked Mr. Galloway, Why are the seeds sent out by the Department better than the ordinary seed? Listen, gentlemen:

> For the reason—
> Says Mr. Galloway—
> that we buy our seed in this way: In the first place, a considerable portion of the seed is grown for us out of what we call our own stock. We know the full history of the stock.

Now, that corroborates the statement I made a while ago about young Mr. Wilson, if he needs any corroboration. He needs none. Young Mr. Wilson, the Secretary's son, said to me this morning that a large portion of the seeds we send out were grown by direction of Secretary Wilson; that they employed people over the country to raise this seed, and from this we get the seed to send around over the country.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Department of Agriculture is in the business of raising these seeds that are distributed?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I state to the gentleman that I am so informed; and Doctor Galloway so states, as I am trying to show.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. They are bought.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They have gardens, a horticultural garden down here which supplies the White House with flowers and supplies the gentleman from Connecticut with flowers, and so forth, and so on.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I do not happen to receive any.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, you are "the flower" of your delegation anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. But if the gentleman will allow me a moment, the Department of Agriculture has not the facilities for raising 1 per cent of the seeds that are distributed. They are bought in the open market, and are bought abroad, many of them, imported.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman from Tennessee get potatoes to send to his constituents?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; but a negro man who ran against me for Congress some years ago sent to me for some "seed frogs" last fall. Do you need any in your district? I can get some from my old home if you do.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would go to the Fish Commission for that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I sent to the Department, out of respect to the man, a good citizen, a negro, too, who made the inquiry. He had bought him a farm with a pond on it. I had told him previously that I knew the Department had no seed frogs. Now, why does Mr. Galloway say these Department seeds are better? He says:

> For the reason that we buy our seed in this way: In the first place, a considerable portion of the seed is grown for us out of what we call our own stock. We know the full history of the stock. We get, for example, a pound of lettuce seed of a high quality, and it is true to name. We can take that pound of lettuce seed and turn it over to a reliable man in California and get 100 pounds that is absolutely true to stock, and in order to make it true we send a man into the field where that lettuce seed is grown and have him rove the field—that is, we eliminate all of the lettuce before the seed have gotten away from the desirable characters.

Now, that corroborates what young Mr. Wilson has said, although he is against this seed proposition, I want to say. I took issue with him, under the circumstances—I fear a seed trust—and I am going to tell you why in a few minutes. Mr. Galloway further says:

> We have for that work a man who has had more experience than any other man in the United States—Mr. W. W. Tracy, sr. His special business is to keep track of our stock. That is the stock we start with. That is done for the greater portion of our seed, and the other we buy out of stock or in the open market under these conditions: We buy to-day, for example, a lot of onion seed. That onion seed, we provide in the contract, must not only be true to name, but must have a certain standard of vitality. It is sent here, and more or less of it is tested in our laboratory, and if it does not come up to our standard it is rejected.
> If it is found it is not true to name—and we can only determine that after our field tests are made the following summer—we always withhold a certain amount of pay to cover that; but then during the following summer we make field tests at the Arlington farm and six or seven other places, in cooperation with the experiment stations, of all the seed that enters into the Congressional distribution. We test it for vitality in the laboratory, and we test it for trueness to name in the field.
> Mr. SCOTT. Where is your seed grown?
> Mr. GALLOWAY. The seed is grown all over the United States.
> Mr. SCOTT. Do you make contracts in advance—that is, a year in advance?
> Mr. GALLOWAY. We must do that. We are now making provision for the seed for next year. We have to do that in order to be perfectly safe; otherwise we could not secure the seed. We buy all the seed we can in the open market—that is, seed that is now available. We secure it now and have it delivered next August or September; but when it is delivered it must come up to these standards.
> Mr. CANDLER. All of them are tested?
> Mr. GALLOWAY. All of them are tested.
> Mr. CANDLER. Every one when they come in?
> Mr. GALLOWAY. When they come in.

Now, gentlemen, I sent for this report of these hearings a few minutes ago, and that is all I see in these hearings on the subject. I know that the quality of seed has been bettered, and I want to say, furthermore, that every one of the packages of seed that has come to me I have sent them out through my district, regardless of politics, regardless of race, color, or previous condition, except when I would get a large quantity upon special request from Secretary Wilson to send to charitable organizations in Nashville and Clarkesville, where there are thousands of poor people who are not able to buy seeds and have a little garden or yard they raise vegetables in. I sent some to Miss Fannie Battle, the daughter of General Battle, a great lover of charity and doer of good things. I sent some to Clarkesville. I sent all these seed conditioned that the distributors should not give seed to any man, woman, or child who is able to buy it.

So you see, gentlemen, when you get down to the ground floor, this money does the poor man, whether black or white, a good deal of good. It enables him to have his little onion patch, his little lettuce patch, and a pea patch, and thus we aid many a poor man to raise vegetables, which helps him to round out his flat stomach. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Has the gentleman any reply from any farmer or gardener in his district or any statement to the effect that they did not want these seeds, and that they were not appreciated?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not a single one; not one. I sent my last letter to-day to William or John D. Parks, of Port Royal, who wanted some seed to give to the poor. Mine were all sent out. I couldn't get any from Secretary Wilson, as he said his stock was all gone. For the first time I received that kind of a reply from the Secretary, and therefore he couldn't send any to Mr. Parks. He is the only one that I have been unable to send seeds in sufficient amount to satisfy.

Mr. SIMS. Let me ask the gentleman another question. In all the literature, newspaper clippings, and arguments that have been sent to him, has one of them ever come from a farmer or anyone who used seeds?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Never. I haven't received a protest from any mortal man.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question right there.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will listen to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Have any of the gentleman's constituents forwarded to him a letter sent them by a seed house, asking them to write to you?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not a single man.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I have letters from my constituents, sending letters which have been sent to them by the seed men, and my constituents have sent them to me saying they didn't know anything about the business, but they would leave it to me to do what was right.

Mr. SIMS. The country has been flooded with them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, my constituents don't have to write me to do what is right; they know that I will do it anyway [laughter], and so it is with my friend from Kentucky; but these farmers sent these letters as a favor to these seed men and left the matter to your good sense.

Mr. SIMS. The seed men seem to think that we are fools, and that we can be fooled by them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I see that no one appeared before this committee to get this seed proposition knocked out. Now, how did it get out? I will say to the gentlemen of the committee, and I want to say it respectfully, that "there is a colored man in the chip pile," as you easterners say, or, as I would say down south, "there is a nigger in the wood pile." [Laughter.] Gentlemen, these great seed-growing people in the United States met here in Washington a few weeks ago at the Willard Hotel to fight this matter.

Mr. LAMB. They did not come here until after we had voted on this proposition.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Ah, gentlemen, did they come before your committee and ask you in a decent way to drop this proposition? If they had done so, the committee would have welcomed them, and none quicker than my friend from Connecticut; but, Mr. Chairman, they met in this city, in Washington——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Oh, the gentleman from Tennessee is off altogether. [Laughter.] There was no pressure brought to bear upon the committee; there was no appearance before the committee; nobody asked for it, but it was a conviction of the committee as expressed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How did the committee stand on the proposition, six to six?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The committee had no aye-and-no vote.

Mr. SIMS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if he was communicated with by these seed men who met here?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. No, sir.

Mr. SIMS. They knew you were all right, and you didn't need any argument. They wrote to all the rest of us.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The letters that have been referred to were written subsequent to the action of the committee.

Mr. SIMS. And they never wrote any before?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. No.

Mr. SIMS. Why, they have been writing these letters ever since I have been in Congress.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. It was in February that this vote was taken.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will listen to the gentleman.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that nobody but the seed men are opposed to this.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I didn't go that far. There may be other people who are opposed to it. I have not heard a single protest from my people.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that all the grangers, national and State, that have acted on the subject have declared that they are opposed to the distribution of seeds through appropriations by Congress.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For a question.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from Tennessee has intimated, to use a mild word, very strongly that the action of the committee followed, if it was not caused by, the meetings here of the big seed men.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I said that I acquitted the committee of any evil purpose.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not want the intimation of the gentleman to go into the RECORD without a protest, and if he will yield to me——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman has no need to protest against anything I say. [Laughter.] If he will let me make my statement complete——

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman will yield, I want to make one statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Go ahead.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from Tennessee has several times asked the question why this item was "suddenly" dropped. As a matter of fact during the five years during which I have been a member of this committee it has been a matter of discussion before the committee each year, and a motion has been made to drop this item. It has been voted down each time until this year, and it is only now that that motion has carried.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield any further. I can not give up all of my time to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to one more question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. I would ask the gentleman if it is not true that every agricultural paper in the United States, or a publication of that kind published in the interests of the farmer, has opposed this free distribution of seeds?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I really do not know, because I have not the distinction of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] of reading every newspaper in the United States, nor do I know, Mr. Chairman, how many of these newspapers are controlled by the seed people by advertising, etc., with them. Neither do I know how many of these newspaper correspondents hire out their services to write anything about anybody, nor how many of them have been employed to write these great long pieces that we see in the newspapers on the subject. I know—I do not know as a fact, but I have strong faith in my belief—that they have been employed in the city of Washington here to send these writings throughout the United States to "their" papers and get their "write ups" printed. I have seen some of these miserable little pencil pushers nosing around I thought then to get the job. Let me go a step further, and I am sure my friend from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] will then say that his criticism of my language is entirely unnecessary. Bear in mind that nobody went before this committee to get this proposition knocked out. No one went there and asked to have it done. What "right" have these seed people to oppose this appropriation? They have every right of "petition." What does "petition" mean? It is an instrument of writing; it is not lobbying in the Willard Hotel, nor in the corridors of the splendid old temple, nor in the highways and the byways of Washington, or of Nashville, Tenn., or elsewhere.

They have the right of petition. That means a piece of writing which is publicly filed before some public officer, so that the other side may have their day in court to answer it.

Did the seed men file any petition? Did this great wilderness of millionaire seed men petition Congress or this committee? Where are their petitions? No; they worked the newspapers, and the newspapers are trying to terrorize Congress. Why didn't they come before your committee? They had a right under the law of the land. "Petition" is defined by Bouvier—of course we all know what it is, but I want to put this definition in the RECORD, so that we can all read it, and so that some of my constituents can read it to whom I send the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. [Laughter.] Oh, all of my RECORDS go out, and I have requests for them all, and more besides; so you see my people are reading and progressive people—otherwise I would not be here, of course. [Laughter and applause.] Now, what does "petition" mean?

Petition.—An instrument of writing or printing, containing a prayer from the person presenting it, called the "petitioner," to the body or person to whom it is presented, for the redress of some wrong or the grant of some favor which the latter has the right to give.

By the Constitution of the United States the right "to petition the Government for a redress of grievances" is secured to the people. (Amendment, Art. I.)

Petitions are frequently presented to the courts in order to bring some matters before them. It is a general rule in such cases that an affidavit should be made that the facts therein contained are true as far as known to the petitioner, and that those facts which he states as knowing from others he believes to be true.

Why must it be in writing, gentlemen? So that everybody can go to the court-house, can go to the committee room, can go to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read it, and file a reply if they desire. "Meetings" at the Willard Hotel, the Ebbitt House, uptown or downtown lobbying, and is no man's legal right. It is not a proper or legitimate way to propose or prevent legislation, and ought to be condemned and repudiated, and I do it here and now.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what the standing is of the paper called the "Southern Agriculturist?"

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where is it published?

Mr. KEIFER. Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I never heard of it before. [Laughter.] I am honest in that, and I do not mean to speak disrespectfully of the paper, and I want to say here and now that I do not allow newspapers to control my politics. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, there is no politics in this.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Nor do I allow any man in this world to control my politics. [Applause.] I allow every man in this fair land to petition me as a lawmaker. I allow no man to lobby with me. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, I am not objecting to that, but I would like to know if the gentleman knows anything about the newspapers in his district.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do, and many outside; and I say to the gentleman that I don't know the one to which he refers, and if I did I don't care if it is against this appropriation, I am still for it. Its editor is a free man; so am I.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to a question from the gentleman from Ohio and not to an argument.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to make this request, to have the gentleman allow me to put in the RECORD here the statement from the editor of the Southern Agriculturalist, who pretends to know all about this.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman can do that in his own time. I do not want to consume my time that way. I am on the side of the people in this fight and not on the side of the newspapers [applause] and am fighting for this appropriation to keep killed off a seed trust. That is my aim.

Mr. KEIFER. But I wanted to read you something from Nashville.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am asked by my colleague [Mr. SIMS] to read Gen. D. B. Henderson's speech on this subject. This speech was made on January 13, 1898. Mr. WADSWORTH, who is the chairman of this committee, was the chairman then, and he is a big dairyman, and you notice there is some dairy money in this bill. There is no onion-seed money, and there is no lettuce money in this bill. [Applause.] An appropriation in this bill seems to depend on whose ox is gored, or whose butter-making Jersey is to be fed thereby. [Laughter and applause.]

I will read this:

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, my text this afternoon is "seed." I have been honored with a great many communications about seeds, some of them signed and several of them unsigned. I had a letter yesterday from a seed dealer in my own State, in which he broadly intimated that Members of Congress were interested in this seed business for the purpose of "buying the votes of farmers." He very clearly intimated that in the letter. And I have here three anonymous postal cards which I intend to read for the edification of the House, as bearing upon my text.

Mr. GREENE and others. We have all got them.

Mr. HENDERSON. Here is number one:

"Free seeds keep Congressman in touch with his constituents."

"Congressman in touch"—that is in quotations. That would seem to be quoted, probably from some of us.

It goes on:

"Why not let up on seeds for a while and send jackknives? Everybody could use them, and there would not be so much waste.

"In that case, radish seeds would not come up poor turnips, and the Congressman would be saved much ridicule which he now often gets."

Mr. MURDOCK. Who said that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is on the postal card. Now, this is postmarked at Washington, showing that some lobbyist posted it here, gentlemen. General Henderson goes on to say, "And I am not honored with the signature of the writer." Think of that. Think of a dirty little whipper-snapper writing to a Member of Congress such a communication as that. No man who writes a letter to his Representative and fails to sign his name to it is worthy of the privilege of sending it through the mail. I do not care who he is, black or white, old or young, Republican or Democrat.

General Henderson goes on:

That is postmarked "Washington," and I am not honored with the signature of the writer.

Here is another specimen:

"If the farmer must be made an object of charity, do not do it with 'free seeds,' but send him a hand organ and monkey—and start him in the business right.

[Laughter]—

"Good government is treating all of its subjects alike. That kills the 'free-seeds' idea completely."

This is postmarked "Philadelphia," and is unsigned.

Of course, Philadelphia is a great city, where they raise everything, even raise cain over there sometimes. Her people got on the side of the law recently, under Mayor Weaver—thank God for that! But is Philadelphia an agricultural field? What do her people know or care about these seed?

I read:

Here is number three:

"John's influence can't be got with 15 cents' worth of 'free seeds,' but if you'll send me a box of hairpins, I'll look after him.

"HIS WIFE.

"P. S.—I'd rather not have crooked ones."

Mr. STEELE. How is that postmarked?

Mr. HENDERSON. This is postmarked "Washington;" one postmarked "Philadelphia" and one postmarked "Washington."

Who is sending these postal cards to Members of Congress? I find that I am not the only one honored with these communications, but other gentlemen here seem to be recipients of the same kind of cards.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Did you send the hairpins?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not that kind of a hairpin. [Laughter.]

Who are sending these insulting cards to the American Congress? Not one of them comes from farmers, because their interests are not that way. They must come from some one interested in prejudicing our minds against the distribution of seeds; and I know of no one interested but dealers in seeds. Therefore, I believe that these are a part of the seed dealers' programme to affect our minds against seed distribution. Whoever they came from, they came from small, contemptible, mean people, who did not know how to present a question to men with fairly disposed minds. Now, I want to say this about the seed business and our buying up the farmer vote with seed. The fellow that makes that charge is an ass—

And I presume there is an appropriation in here to take care of the ass—

"I say that measuring my words," to use an often-used expression.

Now, we get, I believe, 6,000 packages of seeds. I have 9 counties, with over 200,000 people in my district. I can not give a package of seeds to 1 in 50 in my district. Personally I am not interested in the seed distribution as a politician, and that is what they are hinting at with respect to you and me. Why? I send my seeds addressed directly to farmers. In doing this I try to distribute them in equal proportion among the counties of my district and without respect to politics. John Smith gets a package of seeds from Representative Henderson, and John Jones has an adjoining farm. John Smith tells him about the package of seeds he got from Mr. Henderson. John Jones says: "Well, I know I am as good a man as Smith, and I have not got a package of seed. I will just keep this thing in mind for Mr. Henderson."

He feels hurt; he feels offended; and the same is true of the agricultural reports. We do the best we can to carry out the law, but we can not get around among our constituents. I have repeatedly bought at the book stores as high as 1,500 additional agricultural reports, paying 10 and 12 cents apiece for them, and once as high as 15 cents, and I believe they cost about 65 cents. I have done the best I could to distribute them equitably among my people, but I can not get round. I have wounded the feelings of many a good farmer in my district because I could not reach him. The interest of each Member of Congress on this floor is against seed distribution and against the distribution of agricultural reports if he is to look solely at his own individual interest. But I say that privileges once given to the people, once enjoyed by them, are dangerous things to take away from them.

* * * * * * *

We have a farmer now at the head of the Agricultural Department—an Iowa farmer. He is not a kid-glove farmer like my friend from Brooklyn [Mr. Fischer], who was smiling at my assertion a few minutes ago. We call him "Tama Jim," because he was from Tama County. He has turned up the soil in Iowa; he has husked the corn with his own hands until they were bleeding and cracked from that work. He has been speaker of the Iowa legislature and a Member of this House. He has also been a professor in the Ames Agricultural College. So long as Tama Jim recommends these distributions I will stand by him, all these dirty documents to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause.] Now, this is not a party speech; but from reading these dirty documents and from receiving letters written from the standpoint and from the belief that we are the fellows interested in this business, I wanted to make these few sincere observations on the two propositions. I return to the honorable chairman of the committee the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. LAMB. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] three minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] yielded three minutes to me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He has given me three minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have a trust in everything that the farmer uses except seed, and just as certain, I believe, as God reigns and the Democratic party still survives [laughter]——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is the gentleman equally certain on those two different propositions?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Absolutely certain, Mr. Chairman. I believe if we stop the pouring out of these few little seed to the farmer throughout this great Republic, thus preventing the seed trust concern from conspiring against the farmer like the beef trust has done, in spite of Attorney-General Moody and Commissioner Garfield and the President, I believe we will have a seed trust. But this keeps it down. It is free trade in seed. That is what it is, gentlemen—it is free trade in seeds. That used to be good Republican doctrine and it is good Democratic doctrine to-day. It is the only thing to hold off a seed trust. That is the main point and is why I speak thus to-day. Look at Moody on the "Truth about Trusts," a splendid book, and you will find everything on God's earth that the farmer uses, except the air and agricultural seeds, is in a confessed trust. Why is it, gentlemen, that there is not a trust in these seed? Because the Government prevents it by buying this seed and putting it into the lap of the honest yeomanry of this country. [Applause.] This is the milk in the cocoanut, gentlemen, even if there is nothing else to the proposition. If there is nothing else in the proposition, I will vote for seed, and more seed and better seed, to prevent the awful pall of a seed trust falling upon the shoulders of the bending, toiling, drooping masses of my country known as the farmer. [Loud applause.]

The Washington Post of about the 8th, 9th, or 10th of March last published the following:

CALL IT POLITICAL GRAFT—DEALERS OBJECT TO FREE DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS BY CONGRESS.

Representatives of seed dealers from various cities throughout the country met in convention at the New Willard yesterday afternoon and last night to consider ways and means of preventing the House of Representatives from putting back into the appropriation bill the clause providing for the free distribution of seed by the Agricultural Department, which was recently stricken out by the Agricultural Committee.

No definite action was taken yesterday, but influence will be brought to bear on the Representatives favoring the continuance of the giving out of seed to the farmers.

The stand taken by the seedsmen is that the Government is coming directly in competition with them in furnishing seed and is doing great harm to their business.

They hold further that the intelligent farmers of the country are opposed to the distribution, and would prefer to buy their seed in open market, where, it is claimed, they get a superior article and what they want, while the seed sent by the Department rarely fits the needs of the planter.

It is further held that the free distribution of seed is favored by many Congressmen merely because it can be used as a means of courting popularity with the more ignorant element among the farmers. The practice is styled a mere method of petty political graft.

The following are the firms represented in the convention: J. M. Thorburn & Co., New York; J. Breck & Sons, Boston; Schlaegel & Tottler, Boston; Comstock, Ferre & Co., Weathersfield, Conn.; J. B. Rice Seed Company, Cambridge, N. Y.; Peter Henderson Company, New York; Robert Buist & Co., William Henry Maule, W. A. Burpee, Johnson & Stocke, and the D. Landreth Seed Company, all of Philadelphia; J. M. McCullough & Sons, Cincinnati; Griffith & Turner, Baltimore; F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, and Northrop & King, Minneapolis.

The meeting will be continued to-day, morning and afternoon, when a more definite campaign will probably be mapped out and the meeting adjourned.

The New York Sun of March 11 last publishes this:

The House Committee on Agriculture has struck out the item for free seed distribution from the agricultural bill. This, it is asserted, is a tribute to the incessant labors of the National Seedmen's Association. Last year the free seed appropriation was $242,920, of which $202,000 was allotted for Congressional distribution. It is contended that the distribution by Congressmen of free seeds is used to uphold the political fabric of their households. Originally, it is added, the idea was a good one, as it gave opportunities to experiment with the growing of vegetables of new varieties in various soils and climates and find out their actual value and their adaptation to varying conditions. Each grower was requested to make report to the Department of his success. Instead the thrifty and practical farmer grabbed the free seed and neglected to inform the generous Department at Washington as to the results.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to help out the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] in the matter of obtaining some information from his constituents and from that class of them who know what their views are upon this subject. I now ask the Clerk to read a letter which I have sent to him.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOUTHERN AGRICULTURIST AND HOME,
Nashville, Tenn., March 15, 1906.

Mr. W. W. COCKS.

DEAR SIR: The Southern Agriculturist is certainly in favor of abolishing the useless expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars by the Federal Government for common seed. Congressmen are using this law to popularize themselves among their constituency. This paper reaches over 50,000 farmers, and they will indorse its sentiments on the seed bribe.

Repeal the law and save that amount for putting locks and dams in our small rivers.

Yours, THOS. J. KEY, Editor.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I need to do nothing further. I take it that this is a very respectable editor, and I know it to be a very respectable paper. It has a wide circulation, and it undoubtedly expresses the views of the agricultural people who take it in the gentleman's district and in other portions of the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. I have only three minutes.

Mr. ELLERBE. Will the gentleman yield just for one question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. ELLERBE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio how many seed houses have advertisements in that paper?

Mr. KEIFER. I can not tell, but I know that this man is talking for his people.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He is talking for his paper, too.

Mr. KEIFER. And his paper is getting no protest, I understand, from the people. The State granges, so far as I know, in my own State, and the local granges, all made up of agriculturists, are opposed to this free distribution of seeds. It is not free trade in seed. It is an appropriation of the public money for the purpose of buying seeds and sending them out to people who are willing to buy what they want and get the right kind.

Now, this idea of getting seed for the purpose of improving the varieties of different kinds was the original one, and so far as I am concerned I am in favor of keeping that up. But this sending out 12,000 or 14,000 packages of garden seed and flower seed free has grown to be a great incumbrance to the country, and it is ridiculed by the very people who are supposed to have the advantage of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LAMB. I have agreed to yield one minute to one gentleman and five minutes to another, and I ask that the gentleman will not make that motion now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman agree to rise after six minutes?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. LAMB. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in reply to the editorial just read, and say of the writer of the editorial, that my colleague [Mr. GAINES of Tennessee] can run for Congress against him and beat him a hundred thousand to one. There is not a farmer in that district or within the circulation of that paper that is in favor of the statement just read; not one. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. That represents the best paper in the town, and less than 100,000 are permitted to vote.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wish the gentleman would stop trying to dig up dead men's bones. The curtain was drawn years ago on your contention.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on the 4th of April I made some remarks upon what is known as the "Kiowa pasture bill." The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has called my attention to what I said on that occasion, and he believes that I did him an injustice in my statement. I requested the Commissioner to write a letter, stating the facts as he believed them to be, and I stated that I would have that letter printed in the RECORD. I should have done it before this time, but, unfortunately, when I had the opportunity I did not have the letter with me. I think it but fair to myself to say that I was in error in stating that the bill had been reported favorably by the office of the Indian Commissioner. It seems that was not the fact; but my statement, made somewhat hurriedly, was to the fact that, while I was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Fifty-seventh Congress, the predecessor of the present Commissioner was present in the committee room of the Committee on Indian Affairs on one occasion when several amendments to a similar bill were suggested, and, in answer to an inquiry whether the bill in the amended form would be satisfactory to the Indian Office, he stated that it would not be objectionable. My recollection in that respect is confirmed by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. So, that there may be no injustice done to the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, however, and in order that his statement of the facts about the bill may be put into the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that his letter be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I wish to make a statement, if the gentleman will yield to me. I want to state that I have not intended to carry the rule of objecting to unanimous consent to the extent of refusing unanimous consent for Members to extend their remarks, or to insert matter or documents in the RECORD as part of their remarks. I want that understood.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish to add that I would not intentionally, nor do I desire unintentionally, to misstate anybody's position on any question, or to be unfair in statements to the House, and so I ask that the Commissioner's letter be printed in the RECORD in connection with what I have said, so that whatever injustice may have been done him may be in the same manner corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 6, 1906.

MY DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: In obedience to your request during our conversation last evening, when I drew your attention to an error into which you had slipped in the haste of Wednesday's extemporaneous debate in the House on the bill for opening the Kiowa pastures, I send you this memorandum of the record of the case, which you can verify at your convenience.

You said on Wednesday:

"This bill in its original form was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs in several sessions of Congress. Before it was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs it had been referred to the Indian Office and had been reported on by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the details of the bill approved before the Committee on Indian Affairs unanimously reported it. After the bill went to the President, this same office, which had several times approved of the details of the bill, found, not that Congress, but that the Executive Department of the Government had been derelict in its duty. When this was ascertained, the President did not perform his constitutional duty. * * * In some mysterious way, in some way not expressed in the Constitution, some Members became aware of the fact that the President would do what was eminently proper under the conditions disclosed—veto this bill as originally presented to him and state in a respectful manner his reasons for so doing. Had that been done the Congress would have had an opportunity to exercise its constitutional powers and determine whether, in spite of the President's objections, the bill should be enacted into law by the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives. The Congress has been in this instance and in other instances deprived of this constitutional right by resort to the extraordinary procedure already mentioned."

The fact is that in past years the Department of the Interior has opposed, both by written reports and at committee hearings, the passage of the Kiowa pastures bill in the form in which it originally passed both House and Senate and went to the President. It has insisted that the pastures should remain in possession of the Indians, who were deriving from them an income which, capitalized on a 4 per cent basis, gave these lands an average valuation of nearly $8 an acre in spite of every effort on the part of sundry adverse interests to prevent the advantageous leasing of them.

This year no report was made by the Office of Indian Affairs on the bill before Congress, but the bill went through both Houses and was sent to the President, who, as usual, referred it to the Department. In my response, I expressed my objections to the measure in the form in which it had been passed, on the double ground that it made no provision for the allotment on the pastures of the children born since the general allotment of 1901, and that the minimum price, which was fixed at $1.50 an acre, was too low—two points on which the more intelligent members of the affiliated tribes were a unit in sentiment. Before the expiration of the ten days' period fixed by the Constitution for the approval or disapproval of the President, the leading advocates of the bill, ascertaining informally the nature of the objections of the Department, procured the passage through both Houses of a resolution requesting the return of the bill, with the intention of amending it by inserting provisions which would meet those objections. The bill was accordingly returned, thus far at least following the course commonly pursued in such circumstances, if my memory serves me aright.

The only criticism I had to make on the history of the case as you gave it in debate was as to the attitude of the Department and of this Office toward the measure. Knowing your unwillingness, if in possession of all the facts, to let your inadvertent error stand uncorrected, I called your attention to it in conversation and found you, as I knew I should, not only ready, but glad to give the other side a fair hearing.

With thanks for your characteristic courtesy, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

F. E. LEUPP, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

DELEGATE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report, for printing, on the Alaskan Delegate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 956) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the Territory of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The conference report and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

Also the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2325) for the relief of James D. Vernay—

To the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18025. An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes;

H. R. 18217. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets; and

H. R. 11490. An act granting the Edison Electric Company a permit to occupy certain lands for electric-power plants in the San Bernardino, Sierra, and San Gabriel forest reserves, in the State of California.

PORT ANGELES, WASH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the reappraisement of certain lots in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash., with Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

DAMS ACROSS ROCK RIVER, ROCK ISLAND COUNTY, ILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 14508) permitting the building of dams across the north and south branches of Rock River, adjacent to Vandruffs Island, and Carrs Island, and across the cut-off between said islands, in Rock Island County, Ill., in aid of navigation and for the development of water power, with Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

REBUILDING GOVERNMENT STRUCTURES IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Senate and the House of Representatives:

I herewith inclose communications from the Navy Department and the War Department in reference to communications from Mayor Schmitz, of San Francisco, and from other representatives of California. With a courage and self-reliance of which we can not as Americans be sufficiently proud, the people of San Francisco have already started in orderly and resolute fashion to rebuild the city. Immediate aid in this enterprise should be given by the Federal Government. One of the crying needs of the situation is employment for the scores of thousands of men who have lost everything. If the appropriation of $300,000 for the Mare Island Navy-Yard be at once passed, over 2,000 men will immediately be put to work, for this appropriation will be expended only in employing labor. The appropriation is urgently needed as a means of contributing toward the reestablishment of affairs in San Francisco; it will also be of material use to the Navy.

Furthermore, I recommend that the Congress act on the recommendations of the War Department and appropriate the money necessary to establish a building as a general supply and storage depot for the supply departments of the Army and the transport service on a part of the military reservation of Fort Mason. This project is set forth in Senate bill 4475 of the present session.

I have requested the Treasury and Post-Office Departments to prepare their estimates for replacing or repairing the other Government buildings in San Francisco. These estimates will be ready in a short while and will then be laid before you.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 25, 1906.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation for an ocean-going tug for saving life and property on the Pacific coast—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination at Port Bolivar, Tex.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 26, 1906.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. HANSBROUGH, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

POSTAL SERVICE IN CALIFORNIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication of the Postmaster-General, transmitting a draft of a joint resolution apropriating $100,000, to be expended, in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, for the rehabilitation of the postal service in the State of California, which has been interrupted by earthquake and fire; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SEYMOUR HOWELL.

Mr. BURROWS. On yesterday the Vice-President laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 23d instant, the papers in connection with the case of Maj. Seymour Howell v. The United States, and which were ordered to lie on the table. This case is now pending before the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and I move that the papers be taken from the table and referred to that committee to be considered in connection therewith.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5514) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the carrying of dangerous articles on passenger steamers.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

H. R. 14508. An act permitting the building of dams across the north and south branches of Rock River, adjacent to Vandruffs Island, and Carrs Island, and across the cut-off between said islands, in Rock Island County, Ill., in aid of navigation and for the development of water power; and

H. R. 16954. An act to provide for the reappraisement of certain lots in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 956) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the district of Alaska.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 11490. An act granting the Edison Electric Company a permit to occupy certain lands for electric-power plants in the San Bernardino, Sierra, and San Gabriel forest reserves, in the State of California;

H. R. 18025. An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 17217. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the legislature of the State of Kentucky, praying for the passage of a river and harbor appropriation bill at each session of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN SENATE, February 20, 1906.

Memorial of State legislature to Congress in regard to rivers and harbors.

Whereas the only national appropriations made for the benefit of commerce are those for rivers and harbors, which, for the past ten years, have averaged less than 3 per cent of the total appropriations of Congress, while Army, Navy, and pension bills have averaged over 40 per cent; and

Whereas a wise and proper development of our Great Lakes and river systems and the harbors of our coasts would cost large sums and be of incalculable benefit to commerce by cheapening and regulating transportation rates on land and water; and

Whereas for the past ten years river and harbor bills have carried an average appropriation of only $19,250,000 a year, which sum is wholly incommensurate with the great interests involved, and have been passed triennially instead of annually as other great appropriation bills: Therefore

Resolved by the general assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, That in interest of commerce we memorialize Congress in favor of a broad and liberal policy toward the waterways of our nation. We favor the adoption of river and harbor bills at every session of Congress, and think they should carry at least $50,000,000 a year. We strongly urge the Senators and Representatives from this State to favor this policy and use their utmost endeavors to secure its adoption.

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent to the President and Vice-President and every Member of Congress from Kentucky.

Adopted. Attest:

WM. CROMWELL,
Chief Clerk of Senate.

APPROPRIATION FOR MARE ISLAND NAVY-YARD, CAL.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5872) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to employ additional laborers and mechanics at the navy-yard, Mare Island, California, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ such additional laborers and mechanics as may, in his judgment, be necessary for immediate service in the several departments of the navy-yard, Mare Island, California; and the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for such purpose: Provided, That such appropriation shall be additional to the sums regularly appropriated for the employment of laborers and mechanics at the navy-yard, Mare Island, California, and shall be immediately available.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4197) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to enter on the roll of Capt. Orlando Humason's Company B, First Oregon Mounted Volunteers, the name of Hezekiah Davis, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BULKELEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment to sections 1305 and 1308 of the Revised Statutes, relative to the deposit of savings of enlisted men in the Army, etc., intended to be proposed to the Army appropriation bill, and moved that it lie on the table and be printed; which was agreed to.

SUBPORT OF SPOKANE, WASH.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17757) extending to the subport of Spokane, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It extends the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, to the subport of Spokane, in the State of Washington.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALGER introduced a bill (S. 5874) for the relief of William B. McCloy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INDUSTRIAL HOME SCHOOL PROPERTY.

Mr. HALE. The bill (S. 5873) to provide for the transfer to naval control of that portion of the Industrial Home School property lying within the limits of the Naval Observatory circle and the establishment of the Industrial Home School upon a new site to be selected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, which I introduced yesterday, was by mistake referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I ask that that reference be vacated, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

An amendment providing for the construction of a plant for the occasional chemical treatment of Potomac water necessary to produce clear and wholesome water, etc.;

An amendment proposing to increase the compensation of the first assistant sealer of weights and measures of the District of Columbia from $1,200 to $1,500; and tion of barracks and officers' quarters, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for improving Massachusetts avenue from a point adjacent to the Naval Observatory to the District of Columbia line northwest, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 for paving Florida avenue between P and Q streets NW., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BULKELEY submitted an amendment authorizing the appointment of a chaplain for the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PRACTICE OF PHARMACY AND SALE OF POISONS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8997) to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, and 49; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert: "Provided, That applicants shall be not less than twenty-one years of age, and shall have had at least four years' experience in the practice of pharmacy or shall have served three years under the instruction of a regular licensed pharmacist, and any applicant who has been graduated from a school or college of pharmacy recognized by said board as in good standing shall be entitled to examination upon presentation of his diploma;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
E. J. BURKETT,
THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

P. P. CAMPBELL,
E. L. TAYLOR, Jr.,
ADOLPH MEYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am reluctant to ask further attention of the Senate to the question involved in the proviso to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to this bill prohibiting the court in a suit brought under the provisions of the amendment for a review of the rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission from granting, pending the final decree, an interlocutory injunction suspending the order. The question is a very grave one to my apprehension. It is my conviction that if the amendment were adopted it would very seriously imperil the rate-fixing provision of this bill if enacted into law.

The subject is a great deal broader, however, than in its application to this measure. It is, to me, the largest question which has been presented to the Senate, take it all in all, since I have had the honor to be a member of this body. Its main support (and no proposition could have better, or abler) has come from the distinguished Senator from Texas. His argument, in concentrated form, I find in a few words printed upon the pamphlet copy of his speech recently delivered:

> The power to create and the power to destroy must, in the nature of things, include the power to limit and control.

Applied to the question I am proposing to discuss, that proposition seems to me not only unsound but dangerous, from the standpoint of the Constitution, as restricting the exercise, untrammeled by legislation, of the judicial power of the Constitution by the courts of the United States.

The question is a narrow one, although many things have been discussed, and I am responsible in part for the scope of the debate. It is not whether Congress has the power to destroy the Federal courts. I deny that, unless others are created at the same time in which co instanti is vested some of the judicial power of the Constitution, but I pass that for the moment. The question is not whether Congress may confer jurisdiction of the enumerated cases of the Constitution over Federal courts or withhold it. I admit that. I do not for a moment question, nor have I questioned, under the decisions, that Congress may confer jurisdiction over one of the enumerated controversies or all of them upon one or all of the Federal courts, and withdraw it.

The power of Congress to confer and withdraw the jurisdiction is not here, as I understand it, in dispute, but by confounding jurisdiction with judicial power, treating the two words as representing the same thought and meaning the same thing, this motto is logical in saying that the power which the Congress has over the jurisdiction it has also over the exercise of the judicial power jurisdiction existing; that in a case over which the court has jurisdiction Congress has authority to limit and control the judicial power. I do not challenge the accuracy of these words, for if the power exists at all to limit or control the judicial power of the court in a case over which it has jurisdiction, the limit and extent of that control is to be determined by the Congress.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN "JUDICIAL POWER" AND "JURISDICTION."

Now, Mr. President, that leads me to this question: Is there or is there not a distinction between judicial power and jurisdiction in its relation to this and kindred questions?

The Senator from Texas reprobated a little the tendency of lawyers to indulge in subtle distinctions. When as able a lawyer as he is sneers at lawyers for indulging in subtle distinctions, it must, I think, necessarily arise from a consciousness of necessity to indulge in some looseness of speech if not in looseness of thought. Distinctions in the law are multitudinous. Lawyers have to deal with them. The courts are always dealing with them. I have not known many which in the last analysis were not important. I have in my life followed some which seemed to me too subtle to be sound back to their origin—a laborious work—to find where first they sprung into existence and were recognized or asserted by a court; and in almost every case I have found the origin of these distinctions to be in a finer sense of justice and their foundation to lie in necessity for ampler judicial remedies.

The Senator from Texas credited also, asserting, however, that it is of no value to the patentees, the invention of the distinction between judicial power and jurisdiction to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and myself. I would have to be very, very old to establish any claim to the invention of that distinction. I find it clearly enough marked in Blackstone, the words "judicial power" being used in the same sense that they were used by the framers of the Constitution, and the word "jurisdiction" also used in the same sense, which is familiar to every lawyer, and which originating in the Constitution so far as this question is concerned is carried through the decisions. Chief Justice Holt defined judicial power thus:

> Whenever a power is given to examine, hear, and punish it is a judicial power, and they in whom it is reposed act as judges.

Mr. President, to me it is written plainly in the Constitution, and no sophistry can eliminate it or confuse it. Very many of the men who framed the Constitution were great and learned lawyers. It has been said of this instrument, and I think it is true, that tautology is a stranger to it; that almost, if not every, word in it has its distinct significance, and it has been said by the courts many times in construing it that every word must be given significance.

Mr. President, the judicial power of the United States is an indivisible thing. "Jurisdiction" may be distributed, and has been and may be changed and redistributed. There are fourteen sorts of jurisdiction. One finds them all in Bouvier. I have found but one meaning substantially imputed to the words "judicial power." The States possessed all the judicial power, and by the Constitution they surrendered to the United States that which is set forth in that instrument. The Constitution says (Art. III):

> SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. * * *

Then, section 2 provides:

SEC. 2. The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects.

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions, and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

Did the framers of the Constitution use the two words in the same sense? Did they not, Mr. President, use the words "original jurisdiction" in the sense with which lawyers are so familiar? What does it mean? It means that a suit "may be begun" in that court. The judicial power extends to such suit when brought within this original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court:

In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction only.

Does that mean appellate "judicial power?" It means what it says, Mr. President—appellate jurisdiction. What is this? Manifestly the right to exercise the judicial power on appeal.

It is the essential criterion of appellate jurisdiction that it revises and corrects the proceedings in a cause already instituted and does not create that cause. (Marbury v. Madison.)

It seems perfectly obvious that the framers of the Constitution did not use the two words "judicial power" and the word "jurisdiction" as synonymous.

What is the distinction? The Senator from Texas seems to think—although I observe he qualifies the statement and limits it to its applicability to this question—that the words "judicial power" and the word "jurisdiction" mean and were intended to mean precisely the same thing. Do they? All through the books one finds the words in the opinions somewhat loosely used. Now and then we find "distribution of judicial power," but in the great mass of opinions, Mr. President, the distribution of judicial power comes through the distribution of the subjects of jurisdiction. Given jurisdiction in an inferior court over the cases enumerated in the Constitution, or part of them, the judicial power lodges in that court, I think, without any words conferring it in the act of Congress. The Constitution says the "judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising," etc. The Senator from Texas and I do not differ as to the definition of the words "judicial power." I adopted the definition given by Mr. Justice Miller, and the Senator is content with that.

It is the power of a court to decide and pronounce a judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before it for decision.

That is not the right to hear a case at all; that is not the right to exercise the judicial power in any given case. That, to my view, is jurisdiction. But the judicial power to be exercised in the case over which the court has jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine and carry into effect the determination. Of course, parties are essential to a case.

Mr. President, Chief Justice Marshall, in the Canter case (1 Pet., 511), dealt with this question somewhat. He kept, as I read it, the distinction between judicial power and jurisdiction always in mind.

The Constitution and laws of the United States give jurisdiction to the district courts over all cases in admiralty; but jurisdiction over the case does not constitute the case itself. We are therefore to inquire whether cases in admiralty and cases arising under the laws and Constitution of the United States are identical.

If we have recourse to that pure fountain from which all the jurisdiction of the Federal courts is derived we find language employed which can not be well misunderstood.

And that jurisdiction can not be diminished by Congress, nor can it be enlarged by Congress. It is written in the Constitution which limits the judicial power of the United States, and as it is written so it must remain, Mr. President, until by an amendment of the Constitution it is enlarged or contracted.

The Constitution declares that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority," etc.

* * * * * * *

The Constitution certainly contemplates these as three distinct classes of cases, and if they are distinct, the grant of jurisdiction over one of them does not confer jurisdiction over either of the other two. The discrimination made between them in the Constitution is, we think, conclusive against their identity.

* * * * * * *

It has been contended that by the Constitution the judicial power of the United States extends to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and that the whole of this judicial power must be vested "in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as Congress shall from time to time ordain and establish." Hence it has been argued that Congress can not vest admiralty jurisdiction in courts created by the Territorial legislature.

We have only to pursue this subject one step further to perceive that this provision of the Constitution does not apply to it. The next sentence declares that "the judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their office during good behavior." The judges of the superior courts of Florida hold their offices for four years. These courts, then, are not constitutional courts, in which the judicial power conferred by the Constitution on the General Government can be deposited. They are incapable of receiving it.

Even if they are given jurisdiction over the same cases, power to exercise the same functions, they are not vested—and I presume that will not be contested—with the judicial power of the Constitution, and they are incapable of receiving it.

They are legislative courts, created in virtue of the general right of sovereignty which exists in the Government, or in virtue of that clause which enables Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory belonging to the United States.

The jurisdiction with which they are invested is not a part of that judicial power which is defined in the third article of the Constitution, but is conferred by Congress in execution of those general powers which that body possesses over the Territories of the United States. (The American and Insurance Companies v. 356 Bales of Cotton, 1 Pet., 510.)

It has seemed to me that the Senator from Texas treats the inferior courts of the United States as statutory courts purely in the same sense, so far as unlimited control of Congress over them is concerned, as the Territorial courts in Florida referred to by Chief Justice Marshall.

Take the case, Mr. President—and I will only consume a moment on these cases—of Cohens v. Virginia (6 Wheaton, 262). This was a great opinion, perhaps in some respects an "essay," but one of the monuments—so regarded by the profession, and I think by the people—of the learning of Chief Justice Marshall. The first point in that case upon which this great opinion was delivered was the point of jurisdiction, it being insisted, based on the fact that a State was the defendant, and the contention that no writ of error lay from the Supreme Court to a State court, that the court could not entertain the case, Chief Justice Marshall says:

The first question to be considered is whether the jurisdiction of this court is excluded by the character of the parties, one of them being a State and the other a citizen of that State.

The second section of the third article of the Constitution defines the extent of the judicial power of the United States. Jurisdiction is given to the courts of the Union in two classes of cases. In the first their jurisdiction depends on the character of the cause, whoever may be the parties. This class comprehends all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority. This clause extends the jurisdiction of the court—

Did not the Chief Justice appreciate the difference in meaning between the word "jurisdiction" and the words "judicial power?" Was it absent from his mind, Mr. President? Not in this case or any other which I now remember—

This clause extends the jurisdiction of the court to all cases described, without making in its terms any exception whatever and without any regard to the condition of the party. If there be any exception, it is to be implied against the express words of the article.

In the second class the jurisdiction depends entirely on the character of the parties. In this are comprehended "controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State," and "between a State and foreign states, citizens, or subjects." If these be the parties, it is entirely unimportant what may be the subject of the controversy. Be it what it may, these parties have a constitutional right to come into the courts of the Union.

If these parties designated in the Constitution have a constitutional right to come into the courts of the Union, then there is surely a correlative constitutional duty in Congress to provide courts of the Union.

The jurisdiction of the court, then, being extended by the letter of the Constitution to all cases arising under it or under the laws of the United States, it follows that those who would withdraw any case of this description from that jurisdiction must sustain the exemption they claim on the spirit and true meaning of the Constitution, which spirit and true meaning must be so apparent as to overrule the words which its framers have employed.

I will not take the time, Mr. President, to read further, but ask permission of the Senate to incorporate some extracts in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission will be granted.

Mr. SPOONER. I have here the case of Osborne et al. v. The Bank of the United States (9 Wheat., 819), which is a very interesting case, in which Chief Justice Marshall deals completely with this question.

The appellants contest the jurisdiction of the court on two grounds:
First. That the act of Congress has not given it.
Second. That, under the Constitution, Congress can not give it.

He proceeds with an argument, which I need not stop to read:

If we examine the Constitution of the United States we find that its framers kept this great political principle in view. The second article vests the whole executive power in the President; and the third article declared: "The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority."

This clause enables the judicial department to receive jurisdiction to the full extent of the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States when any question respecting them shall assume such a form that the judicial power is capable of acting on it. That power is capable of acting only when the subject is submitted to it by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law.

It then becomes a case, and the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, etc.

* * * * * * *

The Constitution establishes the Supreme Court and defines its jurisdiction. It enumerates cases in which its jurisdiction is original and exclusive; and then defines that which is appellate, but does not insinuate that in any such case the power can not be exercised in its original form by courts of original jurisdiction. It is not insinuated that the judicial power, in cases depending on the character of the cause, can not be exercised in the first instance in the courts of the Union, but must be exercised in the tribunals of the State.

All through the opinion runs the plainly recognized distinction between judicial power and jurisdiction, Mr. President. Mr. Justice Curtis, one of the ablest lawyers who ever adorned the American bar or ever sat upon the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States, deals with this subject, and there is no confusion of ideas in his text upon it. In his lectures he says:

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish."

You will perceive that the Constitution establishes "one Supreme Court," but leaves it for Congress to ordain and establish, from time to time, such inferior courts as it may think proper.

In this connection, before I come to the article which distributes the jurisdiction among the courts, it is necessary to read the second section of the third article, which determines to what subjects the judicial power of the United States shall extend.

* * * * * * *

Now, turning back to the second section of the third article of the Constitution, allow me to read: "The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity." In the first place, what is meant by "cases?" That, you will find, was discussed, and there is an opinion of Chief Justice Marshall thereon, in Osborn v. The Bank of the United States, 9 Wheaton, 738. The conclusion to which the court came, and substantially the definition which was there given, is that a "case," within the meaning of the Constitution, is a subject on which the judicial power is capable of acting, and which has been submitted to it by a party in the forms required by law.

The latter gives the jurisdiction.

I find in an old report an opinion which was delivered by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in the case of Silver v. The County of Schuylkill, in 1859, by Chief Justice Lowrie. (32 Pa. State Reports, 356.) It was a very able bench, and there was no dissent from the opinion. Judge Strong, afterwards an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, of great distinction, sat on that bench at that time.

Those who raise a question of jurisdiction as the ground of objection to the judgment of a court ought to notice a confusion of ideas in the use of the word "jurisdiction" and to draw the proper distinctions.

Jurisdiction is often confounded with judicial power, or its equivalent, judicial competence; yet there is a clear distinction between the terms. The judicial power of a court extends to all those classes of cases which that court may hear and determine. The jurisdiction of a court is confined to cases actually brought before it, and admits of various degrees, for jurisdiction of a case, as a cause in court, vests the court with authority to call in the parties and to bring it to a hearing in some form so as to determine the cause in court, though the determination of the case itself may be beyond its competence. The jurisdiction by which a case may be determined is measured by the judicial power of the court and not by the form in which the case is brought before it. This is a question of regularity of practice and not of power, competence, or authority.

It is not questioned that the common pleas has judicial competence to hear and determine cases of taxation. And when a case of that kind is instituted in court by appeal the court obtains jurisdiction to hear and determine it. This, therefore, is a case within the competence of the court and a cause within its jurisdiction, and the court was bound to determine it.

* * * * * * *

It is argued that the whole proceeding was beyond the jurisdiction of the court, for the reason that the commissioners had no authority to increase the valuation, and therefore it was void and furnished no basis for a valid appeal. We need not say whether this reason is well founded or not, for it does not support the conclusion—the want of jurisdiction of the court. It is the cause in court that is in question. The subject-matter of it was within the judicial power of the court, and it was instituted in court by appeal, and thus the jurisdiction attached.

The italics are in the opinion.

Mr. Justice Johnson, Mr. President, in 1808, had occasion to deal somewhat with this subject. It was in a time of embargo, and, sitting at the circuit, he granted a mandamus to compel the collector of the port of Charleston, S. C., to issue clearance papers to the master of the Resource. Mr. Rodney, then Attorney-General, wrote a letter to the President of the United States, criticising the opinion and contending that the circuit court had no power to issue the writ of mandamus in that case. The letter, so far as it is here, is a very interesting one. That letter was published, which made it a public criticism emanating from the executive department of the decision of the judge in the discharge of his duty. Mr. Justice Johnson took the bench to deliver himself of some observations on the letter, in which he said:

In pursuing my remarks on the Attorney-General's letter, I feel an embarrassment resulting from what I hope he will excuse me for denominating a WANT OF PRECISION OF LANGUAGE. JURISDICTION IN A CASE IS ONE THING; THE MODE OF EXERCISING THAT JURISDICTION IS QUITE ANOTHER.

If a court possessed the learning and infallibility of the angels, if every step in the cause were sound and the decision what it ought to be, without jurisdiction the judgment would be a nullity. Why? Because without jurisdiction the court had no right to try the case at all; no right to exercise over it the judicial power, the power to hear and determine and carry into effect its judgment or decree.

Mr. Justice Johnson continues:

The jurisdiction of the court, as is properly observed by the Attorney-General, must depend upon the Constitution and laws of the United States. We disclaim all pretensions to any other origin of our jurisdiction, especially the unpopular grounds of prerogative and analogy to the King's Bench.

That judicial power, which the Constitution vests in the United States and the United States in its courts, is all that its courts exercise. In the Constitution it is laid down that "the judicial power of the United States" shall extend to all cases in law or equity arising under this Constitution, etc.

THE TERM "JUDICIAL POWER" CONVEYS THE IDEA BOTH OF EXERCISING THE FACULTY OF JUDGING AND APPLYING PHYSICAL FORCE TO GIVE EFFECT TO A DECISION.

And I maintain, Mr. President, and I think shortly I will be able to establish, that the power to carry a decree or judgment into effect is a part of the judicial power without which it would not be the judicial power of the Constitution at all.

The term power could with no propriety be applied, nor could the judiciary be denominated a department of government— without the means of enforcing its decrees. In a country where laws govern, courts of justice necessarily are the medium of action and reaction between the government and the governed. The basis of individual security and the bond of union between the ruler and the citizen must ever be found in the judiciary sufficiently independent to disregard the will of power—

He exhibited the spirit of the real judge—and sufficiently energetic to secure to the citizen the full enjoyment of his rights. To establish such a one was evidently the object of the Constitution. But to what purpose establish a judiciary with power to take cognizance of certain questions of right, but not power to afford such redress as the case evidently requires.

Suppose Congress had vested in the circuit court a certain jurisdiction, without prescribing by what forms that jurisdiction should be exercised, would it not follow that the court must itself adopt a mode of proceeding adapted to the exigency of each case? It must do so or refuse to act.

He then calls attention to the fact that Congress had acted, and proceeds to construe the act of Congress. In view of Congressional action providing necessary judicial machinery for the inferior courts, the question what the courts might have done without it is an abstraction, although Mr. Justice Johnson clearly sustains the concession of the Senator from Texas, that without legislation there exists inherent power to issue execution, and punish for contempt. It will be remembered that in the case of Florida v. Georgia (17 How., 478), the court said:

But the Constitution prescribes no particular mode of proceeding, nor is there any act of Congress upon the subject. And at a very early period of the Government a doubt arose whether the court could exercise its original jurisdiction without a previous act of Congress regulating the process and mode of proceeding. But the court, upon much consideration, held, that although Congress had undoubtedly the right to prescribe the process and mode of proceeding in such cases, as fully as in any other court, yet the omission to legislate on the subject could not deprive the court of the jurisdiction conferred; that it was a duty imposed upon the court, and in the absence of any legislation by Congress the court itself was authorized to prescribe its mode and form of proceeding, so as to accomplish the ends for which the jurisdiction was given.

There was no difficulty in exercising this power where individuals were parties; for the established forms and usages in courts of common law and equity would naturally be adopted. But these precedents could not govern a case where a sovereign State was a party defendant.

Mr. BAILEY. If it will not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. SPOONER. It will interrupt me, but not disagreeably.

Mr. BAILEY. The episode to which the Senator from Wisconsin alludes was a very interesting one at the time, and still remains so; but we have a recent episode more interesting than that one, because in that case it was the Attorney-General who criticised the judge, while in this recent case the criticism comes from the President himself. I would ask the Senator from Wisconsin if Judge Humphrey has resumed the bench to respond to the criticism of his judgment?

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Texas pretend to have jurisdiction to ask me that question and require me to answer it?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I have judicial power to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator's distinction as to judicial power in this instance is better than mine.

Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to say that I stand with all my heart and soul as an American citizen and as an American Senator for the distinction which the Constitution makes between the three independent, equal, and coordinate branches of the Government; and I look upon it as fundamental that neither shall invade in any way the functions of the other; and it will be a sorry day for this country if the time ever comes when the courts of the United States shall be terrorized by either the Congress or an Executive. The place to correct the errors of inferior courts, if any be committed, is in the great tribunal created by the Constitution for that purpose. But that is apart from what I wish to say.

Was Mr. Justice Johnson wrong in his definition of judicial power? This, to my mind, is the heart of the controversy. Jurisdiction is the right to sit in the case at all. Judicial power involves, as he says, the exercise of the faculty of judging. The one Congress can regulate. Can Congress limit or control the other? Given, Mr. President, the inferior court of the United States, clothed with jurisdiction over a class of controversies, having jurisdiction over a case included in that class of controversies, is it within the power of Congress constitutionally to control the power to hear, determine, and carry into effect its judgment or decree? Is there any part of it to be controlled? It is not susceptible of being sliced like a watermelon and the pieces tossed here and there. It is an entirety—the power to hear; the power to determine, to decide, which involves the exercise of the mental faculties and the application of all the knowledge of law possessed by the judge, aided by the argument of the lawyers. Nothing can be stricken out of the judicial power leaving anything remaining. Neither, Mr. President, can the power to execute its judgment or decree be eliminated any more than "the faculty of judging" the two elements enter into it, and the only judgment the court exercises on the question of jurisdiction is decision as to whether it possesses it or not.

Take the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. It can be regulated by Congress. That court exercises such appellate jurisdiction as Congress declares it may. The McArdle case, to which the Senator from Texas referred the other day, illustrates the distinction between judicial power and jurisdiction. From the standpoint of to-day the action of Congress then is deeply to be deplored. I do not like—probably I was content with it then—legislative interference with cases pending in the courts anywhere. But in the McArdle case the right of appeal was given in habeas corpus. The case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was argued on either side by a great lawyer, Senator Carpenter, of Wisconsin, and Judge Sharkey, of Mississippi, both by nature and study fit to grace any judicial position. And the point of jurisdiction was made and argued and the court decided—the merits of the case? No. Only the question whether it had a right to consider at all the merits of the appeal; whether it had jurisdiction or not; and it decided that it had jurisdiction. Thereupon the Congress passed an act taking away the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in that case, practically. The court dismissed the appeal for want of jurisdiction. It had lost jurisdiction over that case. Had it lost any of its judicial power of the Constitution? That was not conferred by Congress, nor can it be taken away by Congress. It remained, as to such a case, dormant until jurisdiction was restored.

The Supreme Court in cases on appeal looks into the record at the outset to see whether jurisdiction in the inferior court is affirmatively shown. If it be not so shown the court, of its own motion, dismisses the appeal, for in that event it has no right to consider the appeal at all, being without jurisdiction; but it thereby loses none of the judicial power vested in it by the Constitution. A State court has jurisdiction of a cause where the parties are citizens of different States. A petition is filed under the removal act to transfer it to a circuit court of the United States. The filing of the petition, with the apropriate bond, ousts the jurisdiction of the State court. It had judicial power and jurisdiction before the removal. It lost the latter by the removal. It lost none of its judicial power. Congress can not deprive a State court of any of its judicial power. It is only a question of jurisdiction.

Mr. President, in the Sewing Machine case (18 Wall., 577), to which the Senator from Texas referred, we find as clear an exposition of the distinction between judicial power and jurisdiction as one need want. Proceedings under the removal acts illustrate the distinction. The court says:

> The circuit courts do not derive their judicial power immediately from the Constitution, as appears with sufficient explicitness from the Constitution itself, as the first section of the third article provides that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Consequently the jurisdiction of the circuit court in every case must depend upon some act of Congress, as it is clear that Congress, inasmuch as it possesses the power to ordain and establish all courts inferior to the Supreme Court, may also define their jurisdiction.

It should have said "must also define their jurisdiction," for it is conceded that if jurisdiction is not found in the act, the court has no right to exercise judicial power over that controversy or case.

> Courts created by statute can have no jurisdiction in controversies between party and party but such as the statute confers. Congress, it may be conceded, may confer such jurisdiction upon the circuit courts as it may see fit, within the scope of the judicial power of the Constitution, not vested in the Supreme Court.

Why use the two words if there be no distinction between them?

> But as such tribunals are neither created by the Constitution nor is their jurisdiction defined by that instrument, it follows that inasmuch as they are created by an act of Congress it is necessary, in every attempt to define their power, to look to that source as the means of accomplishing that end. Federal judicial power, beyond all doubt, has its origin in the Constitution, but the organization of the system and the distribution of the subjects of jurisdiction—

That comes along down. Here and there are looseness and confusion about it, but not often—> among such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish within the scope of the judicial power, always have been, and of right must be, the work of the Congress. (Case of the Sewing Machine Companies, 18 Wall., p. 577.)

In the case of Sheldon v. Sill, which the Senator from Texas cited in his first speech, the distinction is clearly recognized. Mr. Justice Grier, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> It must be admitted that if the Constitution had ordained and established the inferior courts and distributed to them their respective powers—

There the word "powers" is used instead of "jurisdiction," as generally used—> they could not be restricted or divested by Congress. But as it has made no such distribution, one of two consequences must result, either that each inferior court created by Congress must exercise all the judicial powers not given to the Supreme Court, or that Congress, having the power to establish the courts, must define their respective jurisdictions. The first of these inferences has never been asserted, and could not be defended with any show of reason, and if not, the latter would seem to follow as a necessary consequence. And it would seem to follow also that, having a right to prescribe, Congress may withhold from any court of its creation jurisdiction of any of the enumerated controversies.

That can not be disputed.

> Courts created by statute can have no jurisdiction but such as the statute confers. No one of them can assert a just claim to jurisdiction exclusively conferred on another, or withheld from all.

In Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Peters, 652, where the question of jurisdiction was raised in the Supreme Court, the court defined it a little differently:

> However late this objection has been made or may be made in any cause in an inferior or appellate court of the United States, it must be considered and decided before any court can move one further step in the cause, any movement is necessarily the exercise of jurisdiction.

They must first determine their right to try the case at all, first determine whether the parties are before the court at all, or whether the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter at all, and if either is wanting the court has no power to move a step.

Here is the definition the Senator read:

> Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy between parties to a suit—

The "parties to the suit" give jurisdiction in respect of parties, the court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Now, this follows—> to adjudicate or exercise any judicial power over them; the question is, whether, on the case before the court, their action is judicial or extrajudicial, with or without the authority of law, to render a judgment or decree upon the rights of the litigant parties.

> If the law confers the power to render a judgment or decree, then the court has jurisdiction; what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties, and with which is the right of the case, is judicial action, by hearing and determining it.

Is there no distinction, Mr. President, between the right to hear and determine and the judicial power of determining? The one Congress may regulate. The other is sacred, in my judgment, under the Constitution, from the touch of Congress, and if it be held otherwise, there being no limit to the interference, the power being conceded, the courts—intended by the Constitution to be independent, to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress—will have ceased to be independent. They will be solely dependent, not only for jurisdiction, but for power of judgment, upon Congress. And then there would have come about, to all intents and purposes, one situation of evil which our forefathers fled from, and that was the blending of judicial and legislative functions. If they brought one lesson here from over the sea it was that first the judges should not be dependent upon the will of an Executive or a Congress for their tenure of office, and, second, that the whole judicial power of the United States should be vested by the Constitution in the courts and none of it in Congress or in legislatures.

The court continues:

Before we can proceed in this cause we must, therefore, inquire whether we CAN hear and determine the matters in controversy between the parties, who are two States of this Union, sovereign within their respective boundaries, save that portion of power which they have granted to the Federal Government, and foreign to each other for all but Federal purposes. * * *

I will not read the remainder.

It was necessarily left—

The court says—

to the legislative power to organize the Supreme Court, to define its powers consistently with the Constitution as to its original jurisdiction, and to distribute the residue of the judicial power—

Which I claim can only be done through distributing the subjects of jurisdiction—between this and the inferior courts which it was bound to ordain and establish.

Mr. Justice Story, delivering the opinion of the court in Ex parte Watkins says:

But the jurisdiction of the court can never depend upon its decision upon the merits of the case brought before it, but upon its right to hear and decide it at all. (7 Pet., 571.)

I take some definitions of jurisdiction from Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, which I think are accurate. It gives many which I think are inaccurate. I indicate the separate extracts by letters.

JURISDICTION.—Subject-matter in controversy: Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy between parties to a suit, or to adjudicate or exercise ANY judicial power over them. (Citing Ritter v. Kunkel, 39 N. J. Law, 259, with other cases.)

(b)

"Jurisdiction" is defined to be "the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in a given case." There must be, therefore, a subject-matter presented which is within a jurisdiction. That subject must be so presented in the case before the court as to justify action thereon. (Citing Dodd v. Una, 5 Atl., 155, and other cases.)

(c)

As authority to declare the law: "Jurisdiction" in courts is the power and authority to declare the law. The very word, in its origin, imports as much. It is derived from "juris" and "dico"—"I speak by the law." And that sentence ought to be inscribed in living light on every tribunal of criminal power. It is the right of administering justice through the laws, by the means which the law has provided for that purpose. (Citing Johnson v. Hunter, 40 F. E., 448, and other cases.)

Bouvier's Law Dictionary, which the Senator highly and justly commended, defines jurisdiction as follows:

"Jurisdiction" is the right of a judge to pronounce a sentence of the law in a case or issue before him, acquired through due process of law. (Citing Chicago Title and Trust Co. v. Brown, 183 Ill., 42.)

In other words, the right to exercise the judicial power in a given case.

Jurisdiction does not depend upon the correctness of the decision made. (Citing People v. Talmadge, 194, Ill., 67, and other cases.)

No court ever loses jurisdiction for errors of law in rendering its judgment or decree or which occur pending the proceeding, within certain limits, immaterial here.

Continuing from "Words and Phrases:"

The mere grounds upon which the determination is reached may or may not be correct in themselves. These may be supported by evidence inadmissible when tested by the rules governing the introduction of evidence. The reasons given for the conclusion arrived at may or may not be such as address themselves to the judgment of others, but erroneous rules entertained, or incorrect reasons assigned, or evidence erroneously admitted in deciding the controversy do not make a case of want of jurisdiction. (Citing Central Pacific Co. v. Board of Equalization, 43 Cal., 365.)

(e)

If the petitioner states such a case in his petition that on demurrer the court would render judgment in his favor, it is an undoubted case of jurisdiction. The court would be then bound to hear and determine, and its judgment, however erroneous, would bind parties and privies, and would be conclusive of the right established, and could be impeached only in an appellate tribunal. (Citing Goodman v. Winter, 64 Ala., 410.)

(f)

Jurisdiction does not relate to the rights of the parties as between each other, but to the power of the court. The question of its exercise is an abstract inquiry, not involving the existence of an equity to be enforced, nor the right of the plaintiff to avail himself of it if it exists. It precedes these questions, and a decision upholding the jurisdiction of the court is entirely consistent with a denial of any equity either in plaintiff or in anyone else. The case we are considering illustrates the distinction I am endeavoring to point out as well as any supposed case would. It presents these questions: Have the plaintiffs shown a right to the relief which they seek? And has the court authority to determine whether or not they have shown such a right? A wrong determination of the question first stated is error, but can be reexamined only on appeal. The other question is the question of jurisdiction. (Citing People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y., 263.)

(g)

It is not the particular decision given which makes up jurisdiction, but it is the authority to decide the question at all. Otherwise the distinction between the erroneous exercise of jurisdiction on the one hand, and the total want of it on the other, must be obliterated. (Citing Chase v. Christianson, 41 Cal., 253.) The distinction is between a lack of power or want of jurisdiction in the court and a wrongful or defective execution of the power. In the first instance, all acts of the court not having jurisdiction or power are void, in the latter only voidable. (Citing Paine's Lessee v. Mooreland, 15 Ohio, 435.)

(h)

Jurisdiction of a court is the power to hear and determine the particular case involved. If this power to hear and determine the particular case does not exist, then, to confer actual jurisdiction of the particular case or subject-matter thereof, the judicial power of the court must be invoked or brought into action by such measures and in such manner as is required by the local law of the tribunal. When this is done, it is then coram judice. (Citing Basset Min. Co. v. Schoolfield, 10 Colo., 46.)

(i)

It is not enough that the court should have jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It must have jurisdiction of, or power to try, the individual cause. (Citing Yates v. Lansing (N. Y.) 9 Johns., 395.)

(j)

By "jurisdiction," as applied to judicial proceedings, is meant the right to act. (Citing Bumstead v. Read, 31 Barb., 661.)

(k)

Jurisdiction means the power to act judicially; to determine any question presented in a controversy between parties. (Citing King v. Poole, 36 Barb., 244.)

(l)

Jurisdiction means legal power to make a judicial decision. (Citing Browning v. Wheeler, 24 Wend., 258.)

It is said in re Sawyer (124 U. S., 220):

As this court has often said, "Where a court has jurisdiction, it has a right to decide every question which occurs in the cause; and whether its decisions be correct or otherwise, its judgment, until reversed, is regarded as binding in every other court. But if it act without authority, its judgments and orders are regarded as nullities. They are not voidable, but simply void." (Elliott v. Peirsol, 26 U. S., 1 Pet., 328, 340, and other cases.)

It is axiomatic that jurisdiction over the subject-matter must be vested in a judicial tribunal by the law of the land, or it does not possess it. Consent of parties can not confer it, although such consent gives jurisdiction over themselves. And the court, having jurisdiction over the subject-matter and over the parties, may exercise the judicial power in the case and bind the parties to it by its judgment or decree.

But, Mr. President, I will not spend more time on the question whether there is a distinction between "judicial power" and "jurisdiction." With due deference to those who differ from me, I think the distinction is an obvious one. I do not see the force of the qualification made by the Senator from Texas, that while there is in some aspects such a distinction, there is none applicable to the question here involved. If it is not important in the matter which we are here discussing, it is impossible to imagine a controversy in which it would be of the slightest significance. I read again Mr. Justice Miller's definition of judicial power:

It is the power of a court to decide and pronounce judgment and carry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before it.

"JUDICIAL POWER" INVOLVES POWER TO CARRY INTO EFFECT JUDGMENTS AND DECREES.

Now, Mr. President, a part of that definition of judicial power is the power to carry its judgments into effect, the power in an action at law to issue execution, the power upon a decree in equity to utilize the usual equitable processes and orders for carrying into effect the decree. Whether upon the creation of inferior courts they would have possessed, in the absence of legislation, the power to issue executions and other processes is immaterial for my purposes. I am willing to concede for the purposes of the argument that they would not. If the Congress had failed, therefore, to provide process and judicial machinery to enable the courts to effectually exercise the judicial power, it might be said that it had failed to organize the courts of the United States, and that they would remain without power to enforce their judgments until Congress supplied the necessary machinery, or they would have been without the judicial power of the Constitution under the agreed definition. I am not called upon to dispute that at all. The Congress did early, after creating the inferior courts, pass process acts conferring upon the courts the right "to issue writs of sciere facias, habeas corpus, and all other writs not specially provided by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the principles and usages of law."

Under what power was this legislation enacted? Not under the power to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court. Not under, as an implication, the power in the judicial article to "ordain and establish" inferior courts. Not as involved in the power to create and destroy. Not at all. But, Mr. President, under this clause of the Constitution, subdivision 18 of section 8, Article I:

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Chief Justice Marshall in Wayman v. Southard et al. (10 Wheat., 1), delivering the opinion of the court, says (the question being involved):

The Constitution concludes its enumeration of granted powers with a clause authorizing Congress to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any Department or officer thereof. The judicial department is invested with jurisdiction in certain specified cases, in all which it has power to render judgment.

That a power to make laws for carrying into execution all the judgments which the judicial department has power to pronounce, is expressly conferred by this clause, seems to be one of those plain propositions which reasoning can not render plainer. The terms of the clause neither require nor admit of elucidation. The court, therefore, will only say that no doubt whatever is entertained on the power of Congress over the subject. The only inquiry is, How far has this power been exercised?

The thirteenth section of the judiciary act of 1789, chapter 20, describes the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and grants the power to issue writs of prohibition and mandamus in certain specified cases. The fourteenth section enacts "that all the before-mentioned courts of the United States shall have power to issue writs of scire facias, habeas corpus, and all other writs not specially provided by statute which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the principles and usages of law." The seventeenth section authorizes the courts "to make all necessary rules for the orderly conducting of business in the said courts," and the eighteenth empowers a court to suspend execution in order to give time for granting a new trial.

These sections have been relied on by the counsel for the plaintiffs.

The words of the fourteenth are understood by the court to comprehend executions. An execution is a writ, which is certainly "agreeable to the principles and usages of law."

There is no reason for supposing that the general term "writs" is restrained by the words "which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions" to original process, or to process anterior to judgments. The jurisdiction of a court is not exhausted by the rendition of its judgment, but continues until that judgment shall be satisfied. Many questions arise on the process subsequent to the judgment in which jurisdiction is to be exercised. It is, therefore, no unreasonable extension of the words of the act to suppose an execution necessary for the exercise of jurisdiction. Were it even true that jurisdiction could technically be said to terminate with the judgment, an execution would be a writ necessary for the perfection of that which was previously done, and would, consequently, be necessary to the beneficial exercise of jurisdiction. If any doubt could exist on this subject the eighteenth section, which treats of the authority of the court over its executions as actually existing, certainly implies that the power to issue them had been granted in the fourteenth section. The same implication is afforded by the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth sections, both of which proceed on the idea that the power to issue writs of execution was in possession of the courts. So, too, the process act, which was depending at the same time with the judiciary act, prescribes the forms of execution, but does not give a power to issue them.

On the clearest principles of just construction, then, the fourteenth section of the judiciary act must be understood as giving to the courts of the Union, respectively, a power to issue executions on their judgments.

Mr. Justice Iredell in his dissenting opinion in the case of Chisholm v. Georgia (2 Dallas, 432) traced the power to pass the process acts to the same source, and declared it to be the constitutional duty of Congress to enact such laws, and intimated a restriction upon their power. He says:

I conceive that all the courts of the United States must receive, not merely their organization as to the number of judges of which they are to consist, but all their authority, as to the manner of their proceeding from the legislature only. This appears to me to be one of those cases, with many others, in which an article of the Constitution can not be effectuated without the intervention of the legislative authority. There being many such, at the end of the special enumeration of the powers of Congress in the Constitution is this general one: "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof." None will deny that an act of legislation is necessary to say at least of what number the judges are to consist; the President, with the consent of the Senate, could not nominate a number at their discretion. The Constitution intended this article so far at least to be the subject of a legislative act. Having a right thus to establish the court, and it being capable of being established in no other manner, I conceive it necessarily follows that they are also to direct the manner of its proceedings. Upon this authority there is, that I know, but one limit; that is, "that they shall not exceed their authority." If they do, I have no hesitation to say that any act to that effect would be utterly void, because it would be inconsistent with the Constitution, which is a fundamental law paramount to all others, which we are not only bound to consult, but sworn to observe, and therefore where there is an interference, being superior in obligation to the other, we must unquestionably obey that in preference. Subject to this restriction, the whole business of organizing the courts and directing the methods of their proceeding where necessary, I conceive to be in the discretion of Congress. If it shall be found on this occasion, or on any other, that the remedies now in being are defective, for any purpose it is their duty to provide for, they no doubt will provide others. It is their duty to legislate, so far as is necessary, to carry the Constitution into effect. It is ours only to judge. We have no reason, nor any more right to distrust their doing their duty, than they have to distrust that we all do ours. There is no part of the Constitution that I know of that authorizes this court to take up any business where they left it, and in order that the powers given in the Constitution may be in full activity, supply their omission by making new laws for new cases, or, which I take to be the same thing, applying old principles to new cases materially different from those to which they were applied before.

Now, Mr. President, the power conferred by section 18 is not an unlimited power. The Senator from Texas seemed to think that after Congress had created inferior courts, clothing them with jurisdiction, Congress could prevent their issuing execution and carrying into effect their decrees and judgments. I dissent from that proposition. Could Congress prohibit by a valid act the circuit and district courts of Pennsylvania from issuing any executions or other process to carry into effect their judgments or decrees? I do not doubt that it could not.

This eighteenth subdivision from which Congress obtained power to pass the process acts, as I said, does not confer an unlimited power. It was the provision to enable the Congress "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof," which includes, of course, the judicial department. That clause of the Constitution has been under review by the Supreme Court of the United States more than once. First, it arose in the case of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat., 316), and of it Chief Justice Marshall said:

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

That was adopted by the court in the Legal Tender cases (110 U. S., 421). They say in addition:

But, admitting it to be true, what does it prove?

That is, whether the power which Congress had exercised was necessary or appropriate.

Nothing more than that Congress had the choice of means for a legitimate end, each appropriate and adapted to that end, though, perhaps, in different degrees. What then? Can this court say that it ought to have adopted one rather than the other? Is it our province to decide that the means selected were beyond the constitutional power of Congress because we may think that other means to the same ends would have been more appropriate and equally efficient?

The question is for the court to decide whether Congress has in a given case exceeded its power under section 18.

When the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to the Government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread on legislative ground.

* * * * * * *

It may be conceded that Congress is not authorized to enact laws in furtherance even of a legitimate end merely because they are useful or because they make the Government stronger. There must be some relation between the means and the end; some adaptedness or appropriateness of the laws to carry into execution the powers created by the Constitution.

If the Congress should prohibit existing courts from issuing executions or other process to carry into effect their judgments, it would not be in harmony with the letter or spirit of the Constitution, and the Supreme Court would, in my judgment, be compelled to say "the Congress has continued the existence of these judicial tribunals, has thereby testified that there is continuing public necessity for the exercise of the judicial power of such courts; that the attempt to emasculate them is indirect; that the end is not legitimate; that the purpose is ulterior; that the act is not to carry into execution any powers conferred by the Constitution on the judicial department of the Government, but is obstructive and therefore unconstitutional."

The language of Chief Justice Marshall in Wayman v. Southard, just quoted upon this subject, does not stand alone in the decisions of that court. The accuracy of Justice Miller's definition of judicial power, which treats as a part of it the power to carry into effect its judgments and decrees, is well maintained in the decisions of the court. Congress may take away the jurisdiction, but where the jurisdiction exists it can not emasculate the judicial power by rendering it impossible for it to enforce its judgments and decrees.

EXECUTIONS.

The express determination of this court is that the jurisdiction of a court is not exhausted by the rendition of a judgment, but continues until that judgment shall be satisfied; consequently a writ of error will lie when the party is aggrieved in the foundation, proceedings, judgment, or execution of a suit in a court of record. (Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat., 93; Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How., 437; 2 Tidd's Pr., 1134; Co. Litt., 288b.)

Process subsequent to judgment is as essential to jurisdiction as process antecedent to judgment, else the judicial power would be incomplete—

"The judicial power would be incomplete"— and entirely inadequate to the purposes for which it was conferred by the Constitution. Congress, it is conceded, possesses the uncontrolled power to legislate in respect both to the form and effect of executions and other processes to be issued in the Federal courts. (United States v. Johnson County; United States v. Henry County, 73 U. S., 166.)

In Central National Bank v. Stevens (169 U. S., 464, 465), the court say:

> But it has been frequently determined by this court that the jurisdiction of a court is not exhausted by the rendition of the judgment, but continues until the judgment shall be satisfied.
> * * * * * * *
> An execution is the end of the law. It gives the successful party the fruits of his judgment. (United States v. Nourse, 9 Pet., 828.)
> But it is scarcely necessary to quote authorities to show that to deprive a court of the power to execute its decrees is to essentially impair its jurisdiction. Juris effectus in executione consistit. (Co. Litt., 289.)

An interesting case upon this subject, for another reason than the merits of the opinion, is that of Gordon v. The United States (117 U. S., Appendix, p. 697). The opinion was the last judicial utterance of Chief Justice Taney, against whom I was in his prime prejudiced, but of whom I long ago grew to think that he was a very great lawyer and jurist. Without going into a statement of the case, it is sufficient to say that the court held that it would not take cognizance of appeal from a court which could not issue execution or other process to carry into effect its judgment, and to which the Supreme Court could not issue a mandate which it could carry into effect; that—

> Congress can not authorize or require this court to express an opinion on a case where its judicial power could not be exercised and where its judgment would not be final and conclusive upon the rights of the parties and process of execution awarded to carry it into effect.

It is added, and this is the point to support which I cite the case:

> The award of execution is a part, and an essential part, of every judgment passed by a court exercising judicial power. It is no judgment, in the legal sense of the term, without it. Without such an award the judgment would be inoperative and nugatory, leaving the aggrieved party without a remedy. It would be merely an opinion, which would remain a dead letter, and without any operation upon the rights of the parties, unless Congress should at some future time sanction it and pass a law authorizing the court to carry its opinion into effect. Such is not the judicial power confided to this court in the exercise of its appellate judisdiction; yet it is the whole power that the court is allowed to exercise under this act of Congress.
> It is true the act speaks of the judgment or decree of this court. But all that the court is authorized to do is to certify its opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury, and if he inserts it in his estimates, and Congress sanctions it by an appropriation, it is then to be paid, but not otherwise. And when the Secretary asks for this appropriation, the propriety of the estimate for this claim, like all other estimates of the Secretary, will be opened to debate, and whether the appropriation will be made or not will depend upon the majority of each House. The real and ultimate judicial power will, therefore, be exercised by the legislative department, and not by that department to which the Constitution has confided it.

Referring to the decision in Hunt v. Pallas (4 How., 589) in which a motion was made for writ of error to be directed to the judges of the State court, which motion was overruled, the court is quoted as saying:

> It would be useless and vain for this court to issue a writ of error and bring up the record and proceed to judgment upon it when, as the law now stands, no means of process is authorized by which our judgment could be executed.

He also adds:

> The court has uniformly refused to take jurisdiction when there was not a court of the United States in existence in possession of the original record to which we were authorized by law to send a mandate to carry into effect the judgment of this court.

After going into the theory of the Constitution as to our judicial system and the line of demarcation between the coordinate branches of the Government, he says:

> The Constitution of the United States delegates no judicial power to Congress. Its powers are confined to legislative duties and restricted within certain prescribed limits.

In In re Sanborn, petition for writ of mandamus (148 U. S., 220), to command the allowance of an appeal by John B. Sanborn from certain findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Court of Claims, the decision in the case of Gordon v. The United States was approved by the court as follows:

> This subject came, for the first time, before this court in the case of Gordon v. United States (69 U. S., 2 Wall., 561, 17:921), wherein it was held that as the law then stood no appeal would lie from the Court of Claims to this court. The reasons for this conclusion are stated in the opinion of Chief Justice Taney, reported in the Appendix to 117 United States, 697, and interesting as his last judicial utterance. Briefly stated, the court held that as the so-called judgments of the Court of Claims were not obligatory upon Congress or upon the executive department of the Government, but were merely opinions which might be acted upon or disregarded by Congress or the Departments, and which this court had no power to compel the court below to execute, such judgments could not be deemed an exercise of judicial power, and could not, therefore, be revised by this court.

What is true of executions to carry into effect judgments at law is true as to the necessary process for carrying into effect decrees in equity. (Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S., 400.)

It is my belief that if this amendment were adopted and became a part of the law, dealing with this class of cases, the court would be obliged to hold it to be unconstitutional; and I very much fear that if it were incorporated in a provision for judicial review the court would decline to take that emasculated jurisdiction at all, which would leave the act without provision for judicial review, and therefore void so far as the rate-fixing section is concerned, as being without due process, as in the case of C., M. & St. P. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. But I will briefly advert to this later.

I do not care to spend more than a moment on the case of Fink v. O'Neil, which in the Senator's first speech he elaborated, and also in his second, except to say that there was not involved in that case at all the power of Congress to prohibit an existing inferior court from issuing execution. The court said that there was no inherent right to issue execution; that the inferior courts of the United States had no prescriptive power in that regard, but the sole question there was not whether the execution might issue or not, for it had issued, and a bill was filed to prevent any further proceeding under the levy upon the ground that the property seized was exempt under the constitution and laws of the State of Wisconsin from seizure and sale under any execution or other process from the State courts. The Supreme Court held that Congress had conformed the practice as to executions to the laws of the State and had provided that executions from the Federal court should only be leviable as executions from the State courts where leviable, and that the exemption laws of Wisconsin had since the enactment of that statute been the Federal law in Wisconsin upon that subject.

So it was not a question whether Congress could prohibit the issue of execution or whether that court lawfully issued execution, but whether execution could be levied upon property which was exempt under the constitution of the State.

Mr. President, I come now to another proposition. The Constitution contains words which, if the Senator from Texas is right, in my judgment involve an assertion by him practically of Congressional power to amend it.

"LAW," "EQUITY," AND "ADMIRALTY" IN THE CONSTITUTION.

> The judicial power shall extend to all cases in LAW and EQUITY arising under this Constitution and * * * to all cases of ADMIRALTY and MARITIME JURISDICTION.

Have those words any permanent significance? They were incorporated in the Constitution with intelligent purpose. They were put there, Mr. President, by men who understood them, and they were put there to remain until eliminated in the manner provided by the Constitution for amending that instrument. "LAW," "EQUITY," "ADMIRALTY AND MARITIME JURISDICTION." They were not defined, but they are there. What do they mean? It was not intended that Congress should define them, and Congress has never attempted to define them. "Law" was a word of well-understood signification at that day, as it is to-day. It referred to the enforcement in the courts of common law of rights through the intervention of a common-law jury. "Equity" was well understood. "Admiralty" and "maritime juridiction" were perhaps not so definitely understood, but they mean something. What they mean is for the courts, not the Congress, to say. The Supreme Court has had occasion more than once to pass upon the meaning of the phrase "admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," and they took occasion to consider not only what it means in the Constitution, but what power Congress has over it.

In the Belfast v. Boon (74 U. S., 624), the court says:

> Difficulties attend every attempt to define the exact limits of admiralty jurisdiction, but it can not be made to depend upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce as conferred in the Constitution. They are entirely distinct things, having no necessary connection with one another, and are conferred in the Constitution by separate and distinct grants. (The Genesee Chief, 12 How., 452.)
> Congress may regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, but the judicial power, which, among other things, extends to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, was conferred upon the Federal Government by the Constitution, and Congress can not enlarge it, not even to suit the wants of commerce nor for the more convenient execution of its commercial regulations. (The St. Lawrence, 1 Black, 526; 66 U. S., XVII., 182.)
> Remarks, it is conceded, are found in the opinion of the court in the case of Allen v. Newberry (21 How., 245; 62 U. S., XVI., 111) inconsistent with these views, but they were not necessary to that decision, as the contract in that case was for the transportation of goods on one of the western Lakes, where the jurisdiction in admiralty is restricted by an act of Congress to steamboats and other vessels employed in the business of commerce and navigation between ports and places in different States and Territories. (The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall., 555; 71 U. S., XVIII., 451.)

That was under the extended jurisdiction which the court adopted ultimately, because the jurisdiction of England was too narrow, being confined to the ebb and flow of the tides.

In the Lottawanna (21 Wall., 558–609) Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, said:

> The principal question presented by the appeal, therefore, is whether the furnishing to a vessel on her credit at her home port needful repairs and supplies creates a maritime lien.
> * * * * * * *
> That we have a maritime law of our own, operative throughout the United States, can not be doubted. The general system of maritime law which was familiar to the lawyers and statesmen of the country when the Constitution was adopted was most certainly intended and referred to when it was declared in that instrument that the judicial power of the United States shall extend "to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." But by what criterion are we to ascertain the precise limits of the law thus adopted? The Constitution does not define it. It does not declare whether it was intended to embrace the entire maritime law as expounded in the treaties, or only the limited and restricted system which was received in England, or lastly, such modification of both of these as was accepted and recognized as law in this country. Nor does the Constitution attempt to draw the boundary line between maritime law and local law, nor does it lay down any criterion for ascertaining that boundary. It assumes that the meaning of the phrase "admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" is well understood. It treats this matter as it does the cognate ones of common law and equity, when it speaks of "cases in law and equity," or of "suits at common law," without defining those terms, assuming them to be known and understood.

* * * * * * *

The question is discussed with great felicity and judgment by Chief Justice Taney, delivering the opinion of the court in the case of the St. Lawrence, 1 Black, 526, 527 (66 U. S., XVII, 183), where he says: "Judicial power, in all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, is delegated by the Constitution to the Federal Government in general terms, and courts of this character had then been established in all commercial and maritime nations, differing, however, materially in different countries in the powers and duties confided to them, the extent of the jurisdiction conferred depending very much upon the character of the government in which they were created; and this circumstance, with the general terms of the grant, rendered it difficult to define the exact limits of its power in the United States. This difficulty was increased by the complex character of our Government, where separate and distinct specified powers of sovereignty are exercised by the United States and a State independently of each other within the same territorial limits. And the reports of the decisions of the court will show that the subject has often been before it, and carefully considered, without being able to fix with precision its definite boundaries; but certainly no State law can enlarge it, nor can an act of Congress or rule of court make it broader than the judicial power may determine to be its true limits. And this boundary is to be ascertained by a reasonable and just construction of the words used in the Constitution, taken in connection with the whole instrument, and the purposes for which admiralty and maritime jurisdiction was granted to the Federal Government."

* * * * * * *

The question as to the true limits of maritime law and admiralty jurisdiction is, undoubtedly, as Chief Justice Taney intimates, exclusively a judicial question, and no State law or act of Congress can make it broader, or, it may be added, narrower than the judicial power may determine those limits to be. But what the law is within those limits, assuming the general maritime law to be the basis of the system, depends on what has been received as law in the maritime usages of this country and on such legislation as may have been competent to affect it.

To ascertain, therefore, what the maritime law of this country is, it is not enough to read the French, German, Italian, and other foreign works on the subject, or the codes which they have framed, but we must have regard to our own legal history, Constitution, legislation, usages, and adjudications as well. The decisions of this court illustrative of these sources, and giving construction to the laws and Constitution, are especially to be considered; and when these fail us, we must resort to the principles by which they have been governed.

It never was intended by the framers of the Constitution, in the judicial clause of that instrument, Mr. President, to leave the courts of the United States to be shorn, directly or indirectly, of the judicial power conferred by the Constitution. It never was intended by the framers of that instrument that the judicial power of the Government should ever be subject to Congress save as to the distribution of subjects of jurisdiction:

Congress undoubtedly has authority under the commercial power, if no other, to introduce such changes as are likely to be needed. The scope of the maritime law, and that of commercial regulation are not coterminous, it is true, but the latter embraces much the largest portion of ground covered by the former. Under it Congress has regulated the registry, enrollment, license, and nationality of ships and vessels; the method of recording bills of sale and mortgages thereon; the rights and duties of seamen; the limitations of the responsibility of shipowners for the negligence and misconduct of their captains and crews, and many other things of a character truly maritime. And with regard to the question now under consideration, namely, the rights of material men in reference to supplies and repairs furnished to a vessel in her home port, there does not seem to be any great reason to doubt that Congress might adopt a uniform rule for the whole country, though, of course, this will be a matter for consideration should the question ever be directly presented for adjudication.

* * * * * * *

Be this however as it may, and whether the power of Congress is or is not sufficient to amend the law on this subject—if amendment is desirable—this court is bound to declare the law as it now stands. And according to the maritime law, as accepted and received in this country, we feel bound to declare that no such lien exists as is claimed by the appellees in this case. The adjudications of this court, before referred to, which it is unnecessary to review, are conclusive on the subject; and we see no sufficient ground for disturbing them.

In the St. Lawrence Meyer v. Tupper, 1 Black, 522, the court say, through Mr. Chief Justice Taney:

Yet Congress may undoubtedly prescribe the forms and mode of proceeding in the judicial tribunals it establishes to carry this power into execution; and may authorize the court to proceed by an attachment against the property or by the arrest of the person, as the legislature shall deem most expedient to promote the purposes of justice.

In Butler v. Steamship Company (130 U. S., 527), through Mr. Justice Blatchford, the court says:

These quotations are believed to express the general, if not unanimous, views of the members of this court for nearly twenty years past; and they leave us in no doubt that, whilst the general maritime law, with slight modifications, is accepted as law in this country, it is subject to such amendments as Congress may see fit to adopt. One of the modifications of the maritime law, as received here, was a rejection of the law of limited liability. We have rectified that. Congress has restored that article to our maritime code. We can not doubt its power to do this. As the Constitution extends the judicial power of the United States to "all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," and as this jurisdiction is held to be exclusive, the power of legislation on the same subject must necessarily be in the national legislature, and not in the State legislature. It is true we have held that the boundaries and limits of the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction are matters of judicial cognizance, and can not be affected or controlled by legislation, whether State or national. (Chief Justice Taney, in the St. Lawrence, 66 U. S.; 1 Black, 522, 526, 527; 17: 180, 182, 183; the Lottawanna, 88 U. S.; 21 Wall., 558, 575, 576; 22: 654, 662.) But within these boundaries and limits the law itself is that which has always been received as maritime law in this country, with such amendments and modifications as Congress may from time to time have adopted.

Mr. President, what power over admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, recognized and established by the Constitution, does the Congress possess? Certainly not the power of life and death. The Supreme Court has held the words in the Constitution, that "the judicial power shall extend to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," is a constitutional recognition of a system of jurisprudence already existing, understood and established as a part of the judicial power and jurisdiction of the courts of the Union, and that the scope of the jurisdiction is beyond the power of Congress to either enlarge or contract or control, that being solely a judicial question. Midway the limits fixed by the court the Congress may, as indicated in the opinions, legislate, but that it can essentially impair or destroy the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, to which the Constitution says the judicial power shall extend, seems settled in the negative.

"CASES IN LAW AND EQUITY."

The Constitution says that the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity. What about them? Has the Congress more power to limit and control the jurisprudence at law or in equity than it has in cases of "admiralty and maritime jurisdiction?" Is there any ground for the contention that the latter is imported into the Constitution and established as a permanent system of jurisprudence and the former are not? The phrase "admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" was, as the court has said, difficult of definition. Not so much so the word "law;" not at all so the word "equity."

Neither of the three was made more permanent by the Constitution than the other two, and all three are established by it, to be eliminated from it only by amendment to the instrument itself. Each represents an entirely different and separate jurisprudence, well established and understood and administered in this country before the Constitution was adopted.

What does the word "law" represent in the second section of Article III? In Fenn v. Holme (62 U. S., 481) the court say:

In the act of Congress "to establish the judicial courts of the United States" this distribution of law and equity powers is frequently referred to, and by the sixteenth section of that act, as if to place the distinction between those powers beyond misapprehension, it is provided "that suits in equity shall not be maintained in either of the courts of the United States in any case where plain, adequate, and complete remedy may be had at law," at the same time affirming and separating the two classes or sources of judicial authority. In every instance in which this court has expounded the phrases, proceedings at the common law and proceedings in equity, with reference to the exercise of the judicial powers of the courts of the United States, they will be found to have interpreted the former as signifying the application of the definitions and principles and rules of the common law to rights and obligations essentially legal, and the latter, as meaning the administration with reference to equitable as contradistinguished from legal rights, of the equity law as defined and enforced by the court of chancery in England."

In Parsons v. Bedford et al. (3 Pet., 446, 447) the Supreme Court, speaking of the word "law" in the Constitution, and the light thrown on it by the seventh amendment, say:

The Constitution had declared, in the third article, that the judicial power should extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made under their authority, etc. It is well known that in civil suits, in courts of equity and admiralty, juries do not intervene, and that courts of equity use the trial by jury only in extraordinary cases. When, therefore, we find that the amendment requires that the right of trial by jury shall be preserved in suits at common law, the natural conclusion is, that the distinction was present in the minds of the framers of the amendment. By common law they meant what the Constitution denominated in the third article—LAW—not merely suits which the common law recognized among its old and settled proceedings, but suits in which legal rights were to be ascertained and determined, in contradistinction to those where equitable rights alone were recognized and equitable remedies administered.

The same doctrine is recognized in the case of Strother v. Lucas, in 6 Pet., pages 768, 769 of the volume, and in the case of Parish v. Ellis, 16 Pet., pages 453, 454.

Is it more difficult to define "law" and "admiralty" and "maritime jurisdiction" than it is to define the word "equity?" It would seem under the decisions that the test as to whether a suit is to be on the law or equity side of the court depends upon the question whether, the amount being sufficient, the parties are entitled to a determination of the facts by a common-law jury. It has been repeatedly decided that the word "equity" in the Constitution referred to the system of equitable jurisprudence as administered by the high court of chancery of England at the time the Constitution was adopted. Certainly the Constitution treated it as a separate system of jurisprudence, not requiring definition, but established and well understood. The word of necessity means something in the Constitution. It is permanent in that instrument, unless taken therefrom by the States by amendment, and for over a hundred years the courts sitting in equity have administered that jurisprudence as established and understood at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. It is unnecessary to cite authorities to support this proposition.

Of course, where States have given larger equitable remedies, the courts of the United States sitting in equity in cases of diverse citizenship will effectuate such remedies, if they be in harmony with the established principles of equity jurisprudence. (Gormley v. Clark, 134 U. S., 338.)

So, many acts of Congress have given rise to controversies which the courts have held were cognizable in equity within the meaning of that word in the Constitution as they have construed it, but in the last analysis the system of equity jurisprudence, as recognized and established as a part of American jurisprudence by the Constitution, has been administered and must continue to be administered until the Constitution is changed.

In Wright v. Ellison (68 U. S., 16) Mr. Justice Swayne, for the court, says that—

> This is a suit in equity. The rules of equity are as fixed as those of law, and this court can no more depart from the former than the latter. Unless the complainant has shown a right to relief in equity, however clear his rights at law, he can have no redress in this proceeding. In such cases the adverse party has a constitutional right to trial by jury. The objection is one which, though not raised by the pleadings nor suggested by counsel, this court is bound to recognize and enforce.

In Van Norden v. Morton (99 U. S., 378) the court say:

> We think the rule is settled in this court that whenever a new right is granted by statute, or a new remedy for violation of an old right, or whenever such rights and remedies are dependent on State statutes or acts of Congress, the jurisdiction of such cases as between the law side and the equity side of the Federal courts must be determined by the essential character of the case, and unless it comes within some of the recognized heads of equitable jurisdiction it must be held to belong to the other.

> The case of Thompson v. Railroad Company (6 Wall., 134) had been removed from the State courts into the circuit court of the United States. In the latter a bill in chancery was filed and a decree rendered in favor of the complainant. On appeal this court held that the case had no feature of equitable cognizance, and it was ordered to be dismissed without prejudice. It was conceded that if the case had remained in the State court the plaintiff could have recovered. The court said: "The remedies in the courts of the United States are at common law or in equity, not according to the practice of the State courts, but according to the principles of common law and equity, as distinguished and defined in that country from which we derive our knowledge of these principles. And although the forms of proceeding and practice in the State courts shall have been adopted in the circuit courts of the United States, yet the adoption of the State practice must not be understood as confounding the principles of law and equity nor as authorizing legal and equitable claims to be blended together in one suit. (Citing Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat., 212, and Bennett v. Butterworth, 11 How., 669, to which we beg leave to add Jones v. McMasters, 20 How., 8, and Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall., 680.)

In Fontain v. Ravenel (58 U. S., 369), Mr. Justice McLean, speaking for the court, says:

> The courts of the United States can not exercise any equity powers, except those conferred by acts of Congress and those judicial powers which the high court of chancery in England, acting under its judicial capacity as a court of equity, possessed and exercised at the time of the formation of the Constitution of the United States. Powers not judicial, exercised by the chancellor merely as the representative of the sovereign, and by virtue of the King's prerogative as parens patriæ are not possessed by the circuit courts.

The seventh amendment threw a bright light upon the word "law" as it is used in the Constitution, and drew clearly the distinction between law and equity, but the equity jurisprudence represented by the word "equity" in the Constitution referred to a system of jurisprudence very definitely settled, as administered by the high court of chancery in England, and by courts of chancery in the States at the time the Constitution was adopted.

It has been settled that the scope of the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction recognized by the Constitution is a judicial, not a legislative question. Is the scope of the judicial power of the Constitution in equity to be defined or controlled by Congress? Obviously not. Its scope is a judicial question. How far may the Congress, if at all, limit or control its scope? Can Congress lawfully enact a law forbidding the circuit courts of the United States to entertain an original bill for injunction? That was from the beginning a part of the jurisdiction in equity, as I understand it. That is preventive relief, and without it there could be none. It goes back to the interdict, Mr. President, of the Roman law, and from its adoption down through the history of English jurisprudence it was a jurisdiction to afford preventive relief, where the common law courts could only afford redress for past wrongs.

Can Congress pass a valid act prohibiting the circuit courts of the United States having jurisdiction in equity, from taking cognizance of an original bill to compel the performance of a contract, or forbidding the court in such case to restrain by appropriate order or writ the party defendant from conveying the property to a bona fide purchaser or otherwise pending the final decree?

Can the Congress pass a valid law lawfully prohibiting the Federal courts of the United States, sitting in equity, from entertaining or from taking cognizance of an original bill to preserve a trust estate, or for an accounting, or to enjoin the trustee or guardian who has fallen into evil ways from despoiling and wasting the trust estate?

If Congress has the power to obliterate one of the original heads of equity jurisdiction, as they existed when the Constitution was adopted, it has the power to strike them all down, because if the power be once admitted, Mr. President, the boundary at which the power of Congress shall cease is to be determined by the Congress, not by the courts.

And so we would have the Congress amending the Constitution by striking the word "equity" therefrom, which is an impossibility. The Constitution says (it can not be repeated too often) "the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising," etc.

In Noonan v. Braley (67 U. S., 497) the court say:

> The equity jurisdiction of the courts of the United States is derived from the Constitution and laws of the United States. Their powers and rules of decision are the same in all the States. Their practice is regulated by themselves and by rules established by the Supreme Court. This court is invested by law with the power to make such rules. In all these respects they are unaffected by State legislation.

Congress may change the practice and procedure, but can they deprive the court, having jurisdiction in equity, of any power essential to the beneficial exercise of that jurisdiction?

Do Senators think that Congress has the constitutional power to provide that the facts in chancery cases shall be found by a common-law jury instead of by the chancellor, as has always been the rule? The Supreme Court of the United States long ago held that the seventh amendment did not apply to equity. (Shields v. Thomas, 18 How., 253.) The testimony is differently taken in courts of suits in equity than in courts of law. Sometimes a feigned issue was sent out of equity to be tried by a common-law jury, but it has always been the law, Mr. President, that the chancellor treated the findings of the jury as advisory only and not binding on his conscience. There have been attempts in the States to require the determination by a jury of the facts in equity cases, but the courts each time—and they were very able courts—have held such laws to be unconstitutional.

Let me call attention to what Mr. Justice Miller says in his work on the Constitution as to whether Congress may disturb, contract, or enlarge the equity jurisdiction—and when I say "jurisdiction" I refer to "jurisdiction in equity." He says (p. 488):

> Not only did the framers of the new Constitution follow as well as they might the general polity of the English system, but they evinced an ardent desire to preserve the principles which had been accepted as part of the general administration of the law among our ancestors. This is shown in many of the provisions of the Constitution. Among others the article concerning the judicial powers of the new Government establishes its jurisdiction as extending to all cases in admiralty and in law and in equity, thus recognizing the English separation of these three classes of legal controversies as being governed by a separate jurisdiction. At least such has been the construction placed upon that instrument by the courts of the country without much question. It has been repeatedly decided that the jurisdiction in equity, which was a very peculiar one under the English system of legal administration, remains in the courts of the United States as it was at the time they separated from that country, and that one of the distinctive features of the difference between law and equity, namely, that at law there is a right to a trial by jury and in equity there is none, has continued to the present day. And it is a very grave question, one which has never been brought to the attention of the courts, because Congress has never attempted to exercise any such authority, whether the Congress of the United States can make any change in the equitable jurisdiction of the courts of the United States; and if so, to what extent it can be done.

In this connection I quote from a Wisconsin case (Callahan v. Judd et al., 23 Wis., 343). In that State there was a class of mortgages called "farm mortgages." A great fraud had been perpetrated upon a large number of farmers in Wisconsin. In order to promote the construction of a railroad through their farms or in close proximity to them, they had been induced to give their negotiable notes, secured by mortgage upon their farms, in payment for stock of the railway company. I believe there was a little agreement attached or pinned to the notes in some way, providing that they should not be negotiated until the stock paid dividends, or something like that. That is my recollection. Of course the notes were put at once into the hands of bona fide holders—nonresidents, many of them—and suits were brought to foreclose the mortgages. The railroad company did not ever pay any dividends; but a great many farmers lost their farms, and there was great excitement in the State. The courts, of course enforcing the law, rendered decrees of foreclosure. The legislature passed an act prohibiting the courts from trying any action to foreclose a mortgage in which there were questions or issues of fact, without the intervention of a jury, except upon the written stipulation of the parties and giving to a verdict of the jury the same force and effect as in actions at common law.

The court held the law to be invalid; and I read a brief ex tract from the opinion. It was a very strong court. Mr. Justice Payne, who wrote the opinion, has been dead many years. He was a man whose intellectual force and knowledge of the law would have made him a conspicuous member of the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States. He says:

I think the act invalid, and my reasons are briefly as follows: The power to decide questions of fact in equity cases belonged to the chancellor just as much as the power to decide questions of law—

Just as the power to decide whether in equity cases justice demands that the status quo shall be maintained until final judgment belongs to the chancellor, and always did belong to the chancellor—

It was an inherent part and one of the constituent elements of equitable jurisdiction. If, therefore, it shall appear that, by the Constitution, the equitable jurisdiction existing in this State is vested in the courts, I think it will necessarily follow that it would not be competent for the legislature to divest them of any part of it and confer it upon juries. If they can do so as to a part, I do not see why they may not as to the whole.

Who can see? If the legislative judgment can be lawfully substituted for the judgment of the chancellor with knowledge of the facts as to what remedial justice is demanded in a particular cause over which the court has jurisdiction in equity, where is the limit?

If they can say that in an equity case no court shall render any judgment except upon the verdict of a jury on questions of fact, I can see no reason why they may not say that the jury shall also be allowed to decide questions of law.

But the constitution, in section 2, article 7, provides that "the judicial power of this State, both as to matters of law and equity, shall be vested in a supreme court, circuit courts, courts of probate, and justices of the peace. The legislature may also vest such jurisdiction as shall be deemed necessary in municipal courts." * * *

In order to determine the meaning of the phrase "judicial power as to matters of law and equity," it is only necessary to recur to the system of jurisprudence established in this country and derived from England, in which the courts had certain well-defined powers in those two classes of actions. In actions at law they had the power of determining questions of law, and were required to submit questions of fact to a jury. When the Constitution, therefore, vested in certain courts judicial power in matters at law, this would be construed as vesting such power as the courts, under the English and American system of jurisprudence, had always exercised in that class of actions. It would not import that they were to decide questions of fact, because such was not the judicial power in such actions. And the constitution does not attempt to define judicial power in these matters, but speaks of it as a thing existing and understood—

Just as the Constitution of the United States speaks of it—

But to remove all doubts, in actions at law the right of a trial by jury is expressly preserved by another provision—

As it is by the Constitution of the United States—

But, as already stated, the power of a court of chancery to determine questions of fact, as well as of law, was equally well established and understood. And when the constitution vested in certain courts judicial power as to matters in equity, it clothed them with this power, as one of the established elements of judicial power in equity, so that the legislature can not withdraw it and confer it upon juries.

* * * * * * *

The plain object of this provision was to enable the legislature to distribute the jurisdiction in both matters at law and in equity as between the circuit courts and the other courts in the State, giving to the circuit courts such original jurisdiction and such appellate jurisdiction as it might see fit. But the jurisdiction there intended was jurisdiction of the suit.

It may well be that the legislature may deprive the circuit courts of original jurisdiction in actions for the foreclosure of mortgages. It is unnecessary to determine whether it could or not. But it is quite certain that this clause contains no authority for it, while leaving those courts jurisdiction of this class of actions, to attempt to withdraw from them an acknowledged part of the judicial power and vest it in the jury. (See Freeman v. McCollum, 20 Wis., 360.)

I turn also, for I think there is great wisdom in it——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator from Wisconsin insist that in the absence of a constitutional amendment providing for trial by jury Congress would have no right or power to abolish the trial by jury?

Mr. SPOONER. There was much fear about it. There was grave dispute about it. It was argued by many, as I recollect, that the word "law" was to be construed so as to import a common-law jury. But to make that absolutely certain—the States demanded that the seventh amendment——

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has well said that every word and phrase in the Constitution means something, and that would mean absolutely nothing if in the absence of it Congress would be as powerless as it is when it is written in the Constitution.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that there is a case—I can not recall the name of it now, but I have come across it within the last few weeks—holding that the right of trial by jury is sacred and would exist independent of the provision contained in the Constitution.

Mr. SPOONER. The seventh amendment?

Mr. KNOX. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. So there is a case holding the law of a State void even before the State had a written constitution—the celebrated Rhode Island case. But nobody believes that that isolated case is the law, and neither can those of us who believe that every sentence of the Constitution means something and was written in there for a purpose believe that without this amendment Congress would still be powerless to abolish the right of trial by jury, and that it was not written into the Constitution so as to disable Congress from abolishing the right of trial by jury.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to add a word. I do believe there is this limitation upon the power of Congress in respect to equity courts. I do not believe that with this amendment guaranteeing the right of trial by jury in actions at common law Congress could confer upon courts of equity jurisdiction which would defeat the constitutional guaranty of right of trial by jury. My opinion is that the only limitation upon the power of Congress in that respect——

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think that Congress can pass a valid act for a common-law jury in equity cases, giving the same effect to the verdict of the jury as is given under the seventh amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. BAILEY. My own opinion is that Congress could abolish all courts of equity if it chose, just as many of the States have abolished them.

Mr. SPOONER. In the States which abolished the distinction I think they adopted constitutional amendments or else they were authorized by the constitution to do it by legislative act. I do not think Congress can take away from the chancellor the power which he has always exercised—one of the peculiarities of the chancery system—and transfer the decision of questions of fact to a jury making the verdict more than advisory.

Mr. BAILEY. If it will not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. BAILEY. When the people who adopted the Constitution were so far dissatisfied with its guaranties as to insist upon an amendment that secured the right of trial by jury, it seems to me that undoubtedly they recognized the right of Congress to abolish the right of trial by jury in the absence of that limitation, and if Congress could abolish the right of trial by jury, as immemorial and as sacred as that right is, it seems to me it could surely extend it to a case in equity, although I am aware that there are two or three State decisions to the contrary.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator tell me what limit he thinks there is to the power of Congress over the equity jurisprudence or jurisdiction recognized by the Constitution, as construed by the Supreme Court?

Mr. BAILEY. My own opinion is that Congress could abolish it; that Congress could forbid every court in the United States from exercising it. The Senator, I am aware, has just demanded to know, with a good deal of vehemence, if Congress could deny courts of equity the right to entertain certain actions—an action for accounting, an action to preserve a trust. I only remind the Senator that a little earlier in his speech he said that Congress could either grant or withhold jurisdiction over these cases; and if Congress can merely, by withholding jurisdiction, disable the courts of the United States from entertaining a bill for an accounting surely by express enactment it could do it. It needs no express enactment in a case like that, because if a suitor comes to the court with his bill for an accounting and the party on the other side says the court is without jurisdiction, the court itself must look to the statute book and find some statute which authorizes it to entertain that bill of accounting.

Mr. SPOONER. I have never contended that Congress might not withdraw from the circuit courts the equity jurisdiction and confer it upon existing courts or might not vest equity and law jurisdiction and the admiralty jurisdiction in one court. I have denied—and if I am vehement it is more my misfortune than my fault—and I do deny, the power of Congress to obliterate the inferior courts of the United States, and it is my belief that any act of Congress which abrogated the district and circuit courts of the United States without substituting for them courts to exercise some of the jurisdiction of the Constitution would be held by the Supreme Court to be void.

I am not ready to believe that we are in England, living under a parliament. I am not ready to believe that the Senator from Texas does not exalt, beyond justification in law, the power of Congress over the courts. Does the Senator agree with me that the Congress could not pass a valid act prohibiting the circuit and district courts of Pennsylvania from issuing process to carry into effect their judgments or decrees?

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator wish me to answer now?

Mr. SPOONER. Not unless the Senator chooses to. I have no right to interrogate him. I beg pardon.

Whether a case is a case in equity or not depends upon whether it falls within one of the heads of the ancient equity jurisdiction which was imported into the Constitution. It does not depend upon a legislative characterization of it. When the Constitution says that the judicial power of the United States SHALL extend to all cases in LAW and EQUITY in the enumerated classes, does it mean something or nothing? The courts have said repeatedly that whether a case is a case at law or a case in equity is to be determined by the essential features of the case itself.

And, Mr. President, nothing is gained in the way of argument, it seems to me, by assuming impossibilities. I assume in all I say that the time will never come, as it never has come, when there will be found a Congress sitting under this Dome oblivious to the duties imposed by the Constitution. The Senator said the other day that Congress could repeal all laws on the statute books relating to crime. What of it? That is a mere abstraction. They would have to reckon with the people. Congress could starve the executive department. It would not need to pass any law to do it. All that would be needed would be omission to act. Congress could shut up the courts by starving all the court officials and neglecting to appropriate money to pay the judges. Congress could omit to appropriate money to pay the Cabinet, to pay the President, to pay the Army, to keep up the administrative department. What of it? Does that argue anything concerning the matter now before the Senate?

As Mr. Justice Iredell said, it is our duty to assume that the constitutional function of the Congress will be performed—as we know it always will be—and the question is not whether the Congress could do this or could do that; the question is whether in a suit in equity, pending in one of the courts of the United States having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, Congress can pass a valid law taking from the chancellor the inherent function of a chancellor to find the facts, and require him to delegate that power or itself confer that power upon a common-law jury of twelve and make that jury's verdict have the effect of a common-law verdict. I think it could not be done. I think the Senator can not maintain the proposition, and I believe on reflection he will not assert it—that Congress has power to do away with the whole equity jurisprudence recognized and established by the Constitution. Of course it is an impossibility.

Suppose Congress should pass an act requiring in a class of cases the chancellor to grant a preliminary injunction; would that be a valid enactment? It is for the chancellor, under the system, to determine upon investigation, having the facts before him, whether the law or the rules of equity require that a preliminary injunction should be granted, or should be denied. Where does Congress get the power, invading the judicial domain in equity, to substitute its judgment for the judgment of the chancellor or to interfere with any step which shall be taken in an equity suit?

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Wisconsin, I believe, agrees with me that the inferior courts of the United States can entertain jurisdiction of no cause except Congress has by law authorized them to do so. I believe the Senator assents to that proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. Admit it.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, of course, it follows naturally that if Congress confers upon the inferior courts of the United States jurisdiction only in certain cases it withholds or, if you choose to use the other word, it withdraws jurisdiction in all other cases. Let us apply the rule. Suppose Congress authorizes the courts of the United States to entertain jurisdiction in no matter of equity. The Senator from Wisconsin agrees that the chancellor is without any jurisdiction, and that effect is simply accomplished, not by affirmatively denying him the right, but by failing affirmatively to give him the right. Therefore it does seem to me a strange course of reasoning which asserts that Congress can deny jurisdiction, and yet in another breath admits that the jurisdiction does not exist except upon the affirmative action of Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, I say that if Congress may withhold from the jurisdiction of inferior courts all or any part of those cases enumerated in the Constitution, then it is utterly impossible to maintain that a given law which denies them jurisdiction is unconstitutional. If the law affirmatively denying them is unconstitutional, then surely any provision in the law that provides for the exercise of any part of the jurisdiction would be void unless it provided for the exercise of every part of the jurisdiction.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator falls back each time upon the power of life and death. He falls back for a basis of contention upon an impossible assumption. I am not discussing that question. It is not involved here in any way. His amendment provides, of which this proviso is a part, for the filing of an original bill in the circuit court for an injunction to restrain putting into force a rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and on the assumption that the court is clothed with the judicial power to hear and determine that case and to render its decree and carry it into effect I am discussing this question—not upon what would be done or could be done if there were no such courts.

Mr. President, is it contended that the Congress can lawfully enact, as a part of the Senator's amendment, a provision requiring a trial by jury and a verdict upon the facts in the case which by his amendment he authorizes to be brought? That is the precise question I am now discussing. Is it contended that in this case, which the Senator is providing for bringing, this suit in equity, Congress can exercise any function which from time immemorial has devolved upon the chancellor? It has always been the function of the chancellor to determine whether in a suit brought for a permanent injunction a preliminary order was required to prevent the doing of the wrong complained of until a hearing upon the testimony and the determination of the merits. That is not a decision of the cause, as the Senator seemed to think the other day. That rests in the sound discretion of the chancellor, and always has so rested. The power should be exercised with caution. It does not involve a decision upon the merits. (High on Injunctions, 4th ed., secs. 1–6, pp. 2–10.)

Now, for Congress in such a case to "decide" by act in advance that if a motion is made for a preliminary injunction to maintain the status quo, no matter what the showing may be, the chancellor shall deny it, while he may be convinced it should be granted, is a legislative usurpation of a judicial function; and if it may be done in such a case, tell me, some one, where the power ceases? Can Congress lawfully pass an act that hereafter in all cases in equity where the court is of the opinion that justice requires a preliminary injunction, the maintenance of the status quo, upon that being made to appear, the suit shall be dismissed? Why not? In thousands of cases if the wrong were not prevented in limine a permanent injunction would be as idle as the wind that blows. It would be a solemn farce. It would bring the court of equity into contempt.

Suppose the trustee of an estate is about to-morrow, if not prevented, to take all that is left of the assets and embark it in a gamble, leaving penniless those for whom the decedent toiled and wrought all his life. It is the function of equity to protect that trust estate. Of what avail would equity be if in the beginning the wrong could not be prevented? Equity takes cognizance of bills to prevent, in violation of confidence, the publication of trade secrets. Of what avail would that be without the power of the chancellor, which has always been exercised, to grant in a proper case preliminary preventive process? Equity will take cognizance of a case, the citizenship being diverse, to prohibit a lawyer from violating the confidence of a client. Of what avail would it be if equity may not at once prevent that violation of confidence?

Take the case I put when I last addressed the Senate on this subject, where, by fraud, negotiable paper has been obtained from some man and he is in time, by his bill in equity, if the preventive writ is granted, to save himself from financial destruction by preventing the negotiation of that paper. Of what avail would the permanent injunction be if the chancellor could not prevent in limine the wrong which the suit was brought permanently to prevent? If Congress, in a suit pending in equity, in an existing Federal court, may say to the chancellor by law, "No matter what the case may be, no matter what showing is made, if any motion is made for a preliminary writ, you shall deny it," why may not the Congress in another case say, "No matter what showing may be made, no matter how convinced the chancellor is that the writ ought not in justice to issue, it shall be granted?" Where is the limit?

Once admit the power—not the power to destroy the courts; I am assuming their existence, as the Senator's amendment does—once admit the power of Congress to say what steps shall be taken in the progress of a lawsuit and what decisions shall be made on motions and petitions, what is left of the judiciary? Anything? And applied to cases arising under this bill—for I have been speaking on general principles—but applied to cases arising under this bill, the proposition is one which is fatal, I think, to the bill. The men who are seeking to perfect this bill, who are anxious, as I am, that it shall contain no unconstitutional provision, are not to be classed as enemies of the bill. I am working here under my oath to do what I think is my duty. I believe this is an unconstitutional provision. I believe you can not, under the fifth amendment, take private property for public use and deprive the owner of any remedy essential to his protection.

The Congress, the Supreme Court has held, can not pass a lawful act taking private property for public use unless it contains an appropriation. Suppose it did and this power over the courts is unlimited, and it takes the property, and its officers are in possession of it, with no provision for payment; can the Congress pass a valid law under which the party is denied relief in equity? Can it pass a valid law that its agents in possession shall not be subject to any possessory action at law? That would not be "due process."

Going back, it was attempted in Michigan by an act to take the power to find the facts from the chancellor and vest it in a common-law jury. The question came up in the case of Brown v. Buck (75 Mich., 274). It is not obiter; it is a part of the ratio decidendi. The question was whether that was a valid enactment, and the supreme court of Michigan say:

> This leads to the inquiry whether it is competent for legislation to bring about any such radical change as is here attempted. We think it is not. The decisions of the United States Supreme Court before referred to do not bind State practice, but they nevertheless to some extent indicate the real difficulty. That tribunal did not decide that under the United States Constitution there could be no change in equitable procedure—> because the whole body of chancery practice has been repeatedly amended and simplified by that court.

No one claims that—

It has all been done under the power delegated to the court.

> Their rulings mean neither more nor less than that there are various kinds of interests and controversies which can not be left without equitable disposal, without either destroying them or impairing their value. It is within the power of a legislature to change the formalities of legal procedure.

Formalities, Mr. President; formalities of legal procedure. Yes. These may be changed. The body of jurisprudence and the things which inhere in it and are essential to its beneficial exercise are not mere matters of practice or formal procedure.

> But it is not competent to make such changes as to impair the enforcement of rights. In rude times, when there is no business and no variety of property rights, very simple remedies are sufficient. But where the ordinary remedies have become inadequate to deal with more extended or peculiar interests, such as multiply in all civilized countries, different methods and different tribunals become necessary. The universally recognized basis of equitable jurisprudence, found in statutes and constitutions as well as in the reports and text writers, is the inadequacy of the common law to deal with these subjects. A principal basis of that inadequacy was the nature of the tribunal passing on the facts.
> In common-law issues fact and law can be readily separated; but in the great majority of equity proceedings it is impossible to make any such separation. The functions of judges in equity cases in dealing with them is as well settled a part of the judicial power and as necessary to its administration as the functions of juries in common-law cases. Our constitutions are framed to protect all rights. When they vest judicial power they do so in accordance with all of its essentials—

Barring the formal procedure, all of its essentials— > and when they vest it in any court they vest it as efficient for the protection of rights, and not subject to be distorted or made inadequate. is as sacred as the right of trial by jury.

I assert, Mr. President, that this is a sound and golden sentence which is the law in the last analysis:

> The right to have equity controversies dealt with by equitable methods is as sacred as the right of trial by jury.

Let me read it again:

> THE RIGHT TO HAVE EQUITY CONTROVERSIES DEALT WITH BY EQUITABLE METHODS IS AS SACRED AS THE RIGHT OF TRIAL BY JURY.

If it be not so, Mr. President, there is nothing in equity jurisprudence.

Whatever may be the machinery for gathering testimony or enforcing decrees, the facts and the law must be decided together, and when a chancellor decides to have the aid of a jury to find out how facts appear to such unprofessional men it can only be done by submitting single issues of pure fact, and they can not foreclose him in his conclusions unless they convince his judgment.

It is said that there is no inherent power in equity under our Federal system. There are many inherent powers in equity. In the case of Vidal v. The Executors of Girard, Vidal being a relative, suit was brought in the circuit court of the United States of Pennsylvania to interfere with the bequest for education made by Stephen Girard, which the court held to be a charity within the doctrine of equity. (Vidal et al. v. Girard's Executors, 2 How., 194.) It was claimed by very eminent lawyers that there was no jurisdiction in equity; I do not mean over the case, but in equity; in other words, that it was not a case where, upon the principles of equity, the court could grant relief. It was argued with supreme ability and surpassing learning, and the court inter alia say:

> Sir John Leach, in the case of a charitable use before the statute of Elizabeth (Attorney-General v. The Master of Brentwood School, 1 Myine & Keen, 376), said: "Although at his time no legal devise could be made to a corporation for a charitable use, yet lands so devised were in equity bound by a trust for the charity, which a court of equity would then execute." In point of fact, the charity was so decreed in that very case, in the twelfth year of Elizabeth. But what is still more important is the declaration of Lord Redesdale, a great judge in equity, in The Attorney-General v. The Mayor of Dublin (1 Bligh. R., 312, 347, 1827), where he says: "We are referred to the statute of Elizabeth with respect to charitable uses as creating a new law upon the subject of charitable uses. That statute only created a new jurisdiction; it created no new law. It created a new and ancillary jurisdiction, a jurisdiction created by commission, etc.; but the proceedings of that commission were subject to appeal to the lord chancellor, and he might reverse or affirm what they had done or make such order as he might think fit for reserving the controlling jurisdiction of the court of chancery as it existed before the passing of that statute, and there can be no doubt that by information by the Attorney-General the same thing might be done."
> He then adds: "The right which the Attorney-General has to file an information is a right of prerogative. The King, as parens patriæ, has a right, by his proper officer, to call upon the several courts of justice, according to the nature of their several jurisdictions, to see that right is done to his subjects who are incompetent to act for themselves, as in the case of charities and other cases." So that Lord Redesdale maintains the jurisdiction in the broadest terms, as founded in the inherent jurisdiction of chancery independently of the statute of 43 Elizabeth. In addition to these dicta and doctrines, there is the very recent case of The Incorporated Society v. Richards (1 Drury & Warren R., 258), where Lord Chancellor Sugden, in a very masterly judgment, upon a full survey of all the authorities, and where the point was directly before him, held the same doctrine as Lord Redesdale, and expressly decided that there is an inherent jurisdiction in equity in cases of charity, and that charity is one of those objects for which a court of equity has at all times interfered to make good that which at law was an illegal or informal gift; and that cases of charity in courts of equity in England were valid independently of and previous to the statute of Elizabeth.

They found abundant authority for the proposition that independent of that statute, as an inherent element of equity jurisdiction, the courts of chancery in England had administered such trusts. So, rejecting the prerogative element of jurisdiction, the court upon the principle that the jurisdiction inhered in equity granted the relief sought.

It was held the same way in Fontain v. Ravenel, an interesting case which I will not take the time to read, although later I want to refer to it for another purpose. There the court held that prerogative suits in equity on the relation of the attorney-general, representing the King as parens patriæ, were no part of the equity system of the United States; but they sustained as inhering in equity jurisprudence on general principles the power to grant the relief sought in the bill.

Right here, if the Senator from Texas will do me the honor to give me his attention, he will find the principle which applies to mandamus and to habeas corpus. They were each high prerogative writs across the sea, and as it has been decided, as it was here in equity, there is distinction between the inherent jurisdiction in equity and the prerogative jurisdiction.

So our courts very properly have drawn the distinction as to the common-law writs prerogative, and they have held that the sovereign possesses them, and the sovereign in this country is represented not by the courts, but by the Congress, and that therefore when the prerogative jurisdiction shall be conferred upon the courts it is for the Congress to decide.

I want to read a little of what Chief Justice Taney says in the case of Fontain v. Ravenel (17 How., 369), in a concurring separate opinion. I read it because it is a succinct and fine statement:

> It remains to inquire whether the Constitution has conferred this prerogative power on the courts of equity of the United States.
> The second section of the article of the Constitution declares that the judicial power of the United States shall extend to all cases in law and equity specified in the section. These words obviously confer judicial power and nothing more, and can not, upon any fair construction, be held to embrace the prerogative powers which the King, as parens patriæ, in England, exercised through the courts. And the chancery jurisdiction of the courts of the United States as granted by the Constitution extends only to cases over which the courts of chancery had jurisdiction in its judicial character as a court of equity. The wide discretionary power which the chancellor of England exercises over infants or idiots or charities has not been conferred.

These prerogative powers which belong to the sovereign as parens patriæ remain with the States. (Fontain v. Ravenel, 58 U. S., p. 80.)

If I may be pardoned one moment, I should like to refer to another case, for it is an interesting one. This was a case in which a bill was filed to declare and enforce a resulting trust. The Territory of Minnesota, under the authority of Congress, had passed an act in relation to resulting trusts. I will say that in the act of Congress it was provided that the laws passed by the Territorial legislature should remain in force until disapproved by the Congress, which had not been done. An agent receiving money from his principal for the entering of land at the land office took the title in his own name and refused to convey. Suit was brought to declare the trust and enforce it. This point was made in the case:

With regard to the fourth objection, of a want of jurisdiction in the courts of the United States, in the absence of express statutory provisions, to recognize and enforce a resulting trust like that presented by the present case, it is a sufficient response to say that the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States is properly commensurate with every right and duty created, declared, or necessarily implied, by and under the Constitution and laws of the United States. Those courts are created courts of common law and equity, and under whichsoever of these classes of jurisprudence such rights or duties may fall, or be appropriately ranged, they are to be taken cognizance of and adjudicated according to the settled and known principles of that division to which they belong.

By the language of the Constitution it is expressly declared (Art. III, sec. 2, clause 1) that the judicial power of the United States shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made under their authority. By the statute which organized the judiciary of the United States, it is provided that the circuit courts shall have jurisdiction of suits of a civil nature "at common law or in equity." (Vide 1 Stat. L., p. 78, sec. 11.) In the interpretation of these clauses of the Constitution and the statutes, this court has repeatedly ruled that by cases at common law are to be understood suits in which legal rights are to be ascertained and determined, in contradistinction to those where equitable rights alone are recognized and equitable remedies are administered. (Vide Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet., 447, and Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat., 212.) That by cases in equity are to be understood suits in which relief is sought according to the principles and practice of equity jurisdiction, as established in English jurisprudence. (Vide the case of Robinson v. Campbell, just cited, and the United States v. Howland, 4 Wheat., 108.)

Relief is sought according to the established principle of equity and the practice of equity jurisdiction as established in English jurisprudence.

Here, then, is an exposition, both of the Constitution and laws of the United States, with reference both to the jurisdiction and powers of their courts and to the instances in which it is their duty to exercise those powers; and the inquiry forces itself upon us, Who shall or can have the authority to deprive them of those powers and that jurisdiction? Or can those courts, consistently with their duty, refuse to exert those powers and that jurisdiction for the protection of rights arising under the Constitution and laws, in the acceptation in which both have been interpreted and sanctioned? (Irvine v. Marshall, 61 U. S., p. 994.)

Mr. President, I will be greatly obliged if I may be allowed to yield the floor for to-day. I will not take much time to-morrow. I will not interfere with the Senator from Arkansas at all. I am very tired.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It will be entirely agreeable to me to address the Senate next Monday.

Mr. SPOONER. I will not take very much time further. If the Senate is willing to allow me to go on to-morrow, I shall be much obliged.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Arkansas does not propose to go on?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Not now.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that it would be entirely agreeable to everyone for the Senator from Wisconsin to conclude to-morrow, and then, if there is time left, the Senator from Arkansas can proceed to-morrow. Otherwise, of course, it would be entirely agreeable to the Senate for the Senator from Arkansas to speak Monday.

Mr. SPOONER. I prefer to go on now rather than have a day lost.

Mr. BAILEY. There will be no question about the Senator going on to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator need feel that the day has been lost. It is now nearly 4 o'clock; and the Senator began very early. I think we can all realize that it would be more convenient for him to continue his remarks in the morning, and for one, unless something else is before the Senate, I will suggest or move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Before that motion is put, I desire to say that if the Senate will be in session on Saturday I can take the floor then, or I can take it at another time. Any time that will be agreeable to the Senate will suit me.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to consult entirely the convenience of the Senator from Arkansas. He may go on in the morning and I will follow him.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Oh, no.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that I have no right, nor has anyone, to settle it, but I think it is the general feeling of the Senate that as we have taken one day off this week there should be a session on Saturday.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There will be a session on Saturday?

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt that there will be.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. After the Senator from Wisconsin gets through I will determine what course to pursue.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 27, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 26, 1906.

ASSISTANT TREASURER.

Julius Jacobs, of California, to be assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, Cal. (Reappointment.)

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 26, 1906.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NAVY.

James P. Haynes, a citizen of Kentucky, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy from the 16th day of April, 1906.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander Charles E. Vreeland to be a captain in the Navy from the 13th day of April, 1906.

Boatswain Dennis J. O'Connell, to be a chief boatswain in the Navy from the 30th day of January, 1906, upon the completion of six years' service, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, as amended by the act of April 27, 1904.

POSTMASTERS.

MISSISSIPPI.

William F. Jobes to be postmaster at Brookhaven, in the county of Lincoln and State of Mississippi.

NEW YORK.

Fred A. Wright to be postmaster at Glen Cove, in the county of Nassau and State of New York.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Henry W. Deem to be postmaster at Ripley, in the county of Jackson and State of West Virginia.

SURVEY OF ALASKAN-CANADIAN BOUNDARY.

The injunction of secrecy was removed April 26, 1906, from a convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed at Washington on April 21, 1906, providing for the survey of the Alaskan-Canadian boundary along the one hundred and forty-first meridian of west longitude.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 26, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. WILLIAM COUDEN, of Somerville, Mass., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the name of Him who came not to destroy but to fulfill, do we offer our prayer this morning. Bless, we beseech Thee, this nation that Thou hast raised up. Comfort those who are in misfortune. Guide those who are in prosperity. Let us as a people live to Thy glory. To this end, our Lord, bless this body of servants here assembled. Let there be no denial of duty, no betrayal of trust here; but let there be in all their deliberations faithfulness and honor, righteous resolve, and noble effort in end and method. Let the business of this House be transacted without that which is a reproach to any people, and with wisdom from on high. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of approving the Journal will say "aye;" those opposed "no."

The Journal was approved.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, the Committee on the District of Columbia was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 18417) for the relief of the Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, the Committee on the District of Columbia was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 5131) incorporating the Archæological Institute of America; and the same was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 956) providing for an Alaskan Delegate, and I ask that the statement be read in lieu of the whole report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up the conference report on the Alaskan Delegate bill, and asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. The Clerk will proceed to read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 956) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the district of Alaska, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with the following amendment, in lieu of and as a substitute for the amendment of the House, to wit:

"An act providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the Territory of Alaska.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the people of the Territory of Alaska shall be represented by a Delegate in the House of Representatives of the United States, chosen by the people thereof in the manner and at the time hereinafter prescribed, and who shall be known as the Delegate from Alaska. Such Delegate shall at the time of his election have been for seven years a citizen of the United States, and shall be an inhabitant and qualified voter of the District of Alaska, and shall be not less than twenty-five years of age, and when duly chosen and qualified shall possess the same powers and privileges and be entitled to the same rate of compensation as the Delegates in the House of Representatives from the Territories of the United States: Provided, however, That such Delegate, in lieu of all other allowances, shall, in addition to his salary, receive the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars per annum, which shall cover all mileage and other expenses except stationery allowance and compensation for clerk hire.

"SEC. 2. That the first election for Delegate from Alaska shall be held upon the second Tuesday of August, in the year nineteen hundred and six, and that all subsequent elections for such Delegate shall be held on the second Tuesday in August in each year when there is a general election for Members of the House of Representatives, and that at said first election there shall be elected a Delegate who shall hold his office for the unexpired portion of the Fifty-ninth Congress, which term of office is hereinafter designated as the 'short term;' and also at said first election there shall be elected a Delegate who shall hold his office for the full term of the Sixtieth Congress, which term of office is hereinafter designated as the 'long term.'

"That the Delegate chosen at said first election for the short term shall hold his office from the date of his election certificate during the remainder of the Fifty-ninth Congress; and the Delegate chosen at said first election for the long term shall hold his office for the full term of the Sixtieth Congress; that the Delegate chosen at each subsequent election shall hold his office for the same term as the Members of the House of Representatives chosen at the general election in the same year.

"That the salary and allowances of the Delegate chosen for the short term at said first election shall begin with the date of his election certificate, and shall extend throughout and until the close of the Fifty-ninth Congress. The salary and allowances of the Delegate chosen for the long term at said first election shall begin at the commencement of the term of the Sixtieth Congress and extend throughout and until the close thereof. The salary and allowances of the Delegate chosen at each subsequent election shall be for the full term of the Congress to which he is elected a Delegate.

"SEC. 3. That all male citizens of the United States twenty-one years of age and over who are actual and bona fide residents of Alaska, and who have been such residents continuously during the entire year immediately preceding the election, and who have been such residents continuously for thirty days next preceding the election in the precinct in which they vote, shall be qualified to vote for the election of a Delegate from Alaska.

"SEC. 4. That each incorporated town in the district of Alaska shall constitute an election district, and where the population of such town exceeds one thousand inhabitants the common council may, in their discretion, at least thirty days before the election, divide the district into two or more voting precincts and define the boundaries of such precinct; and the said common council shall also appoint, at least thirty days before the election, three judges of election and two clerks for each voting precinct, all of whom shall be qualified voters of the precinct; and no more than two judges and one clerk shall belong to the same political party. The common council shall also, at least thirty days before the date of the election, provide a suitable polling place for each voting precinct, and give due notice of the election by posting a written or printed notice in three public places in each precinct, specifying the time and place of the election, and in case there are one or more newspapers of general circulation published in the town, then a copy of said notice shall also be published in one of such newspapers at least once a week for two successive weeks next prior to the date of the election.

"SEC. 5. That all of the territory in each recording district now existing or hereafter created situate outside of an incorporated town shall, for the purposes of this act, constitute one election district; that in each year in which a Delegate is to be elected the commissioner in each of said election districts shall, at least thirty days before the date of said first election, and at least sixty days before the date of each subsequent election, issue an order and notice, signed by him and entered in his records in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, in which said order and notice he shall—

"First. Divide his election district into such number of voting precincts as may in his judgment be necessary or convenient, defining the boundaries of each precinct by natural objects and permanent monuments or landmarks, as far as practicable, and in such manner that the boundaries of each can be readily determined and become generally known from such description, specify a polling place in each of said precincts, and give to each voting precinct an appropriate name by which the same shall thereafter be designated: Provided, however, That no such voting precinct shall be established with less than thirty qualified voters resident therein; that the precincts established as aforesaid shall remain as permanent precincts for all subsequent elections, unless discontinued or changed by order of the commissioner of that district.

"Second. Give notice of said election, specifying in said notice, among other things, the date of such election, the boundary of the voting precincts as established, the location of the polling place in the precinct, and the hours between which said polling places will be open.

"Said order and notice shall be given publicity by said commissioner by posting copies of the same at least twenty days before the date of said first election, and at least thirty days before the date of each subsequent election. Said copies shall be posted as follows: One at the office of the commissioner in said district, and three copies to be posted in three conspicuous public places in each of said voting precincts as established, one of which shall be the designated polling place in each precinct; and said commissioner shall also mail a certified copy of said order and notice to the governor of Alaska at his official residence.

"That at least thirty days prior to the date of the holding of such election the commissioner shall select, notify, and appoint from among the qualified electors in each voting precinct three judges of election for said precinct, no more than two of whom shall be of the same political party. Said commissioner shall notify all of said judges of election of their appointment as such, so that each and all of them shall receive said notice at least ten days before the date of the election.

"SEC. 6. That the judges of election of each voting precinct shall constitute the election board for said precinct and shall supervise and have charge of the election therein. They shall secure and provide a place for holding the election and a suitable ballot box. They shall pass upon the qualification of the voter and, if he be found qualified, receive and deposit his ballot in the ballot box, and shall canvass and make a return of the votes cast, as hereinafter provided.

"That the members of said election board in each precinct, before entering upon the duties of their office, shall each severally take an oath, which shall be reduced to writing, before an officer qualified to administer oaths, to honestly, faithfully, and promptly perform the duties of their positions; and if no officer qualified to administer oaths be present or available, then any one of said duly appointed or selected judges of election may administer the necessary oath to said other two judges, and he shall afterwards in turn be sworn by one of them.

"That each of said judges shall have authority to administer any oath to the voter necessary or proper under this act, and said judges shall have equal authority; and in case of any question or disagreement over any matter during the course of said election the decision of the majority of said judges shall govern.

"That two of the three judges of election in each voting precinct, outside of incorporated towns, to be selected by a majority of said judges, shall also perform the duties of clerks of election for that precinct; the two judges performing the duties of clerks shall be of different political parties; it shall be the duty of the clerks at each voting precinct to make a full written record of such election as held in that precinct, and each of them shall keep a correct duplicate register and enter therein the names of the voters and the fact that they have voted, or have offered to vote and were refused, and a brief statement of the reasons for said refusal.

"SEC. 7. That each of the candidates for the office of Delegate herein provided for, at any election held hereunder, shall be entitled to one watcher at each voting precinct, who shall be permitted to be present within the place of voting at such precinct, and in some place therein where he may at all times be in full view of every act done. Such watcher shall have the right to be so present at all times from the opening of the polls until the ballots are finally counted and the result certified by the election board. Each watcher shall be required to present to the election board proper credentials, signed by the candidate he represents, showing him to be the duly authorized watcher for such person.

"SEC. 8. That in case any of the judges of election selected as herein provided for any precinct shall fail to appear and qualify at the time and place designated for the election for which they shall be appointed, then, in that event, the qualified voters present may, by a majority viva voce vote, select a suitable person or persons to fill the vacancy or vacancies in said election board; and the person or persons so selected shall qualify and serve on said election board, with the same powers and in the same manner as if appointed as hereinbefore provided.

"SEC. 9. That the election boards herein provided for shall keep the several polling places open for the reception of votes from eight o'clock antemeridian until seven o'clock postmeridian on the day of election. The voting at said election shall be by printed or written ballot. The ballot at said first election shall be substantially in the following form:

"'For Delegate from Alaska.

"'For the short term (here insert the name of the person voted for).

"'For the long term (here insert the name of the person voted for).'

"At all elections after said first election the ballot shall be substantially in the following form:

"'For Delegate from Alaska.

"'(Here insert the name of the person voted for.)'

"Such ballot shall be folded by the voter so as not to disclose the vote, and by him handed to any one of the judges of election, who shall immediately, in the presence of the voter and of all the members of the election board, deposit the same, folded as aforesaid, in the ballot box, where the same shall remain untouched until the polls are closed. At the time the ballot is so deposited the clerks of election shall each of them enter in his duplicate register the name of the voter and the fact that he has voted.

"SEC. 10. That any person offering to vote may be challenged by any election officer or any other person entitled to vote at the same polling place, or by any duly appointed watcher, and when so challenged, before being allowed to vote he shall make and subscribe to the following oath: "You do solemnly swear (or affirm, as the case may be) that you are twenty-one years of age and a citizen of the United States; that you are an actual and bona fide resident of Alaska, and have been such resident during the entire year immediately preceding this election, and have been a resident in this voting precinct for thirty days next preceding this election, and that you have not voted at this election," and further naming the place from which the voter came immediately prior to living in the precinct in which he offers to vote, and giving the length of time of his residence in the former place. And when he has made such an affidavit he shall be allowed to vote; but if any person so challenged shall refuse or fail to take such oath and sign such affidavit, then his vote shall be rejected; and any person swearing falsely in any such affidavit shall be guilty of perjury and shall, upon conviction thereof, suffer punishment as is prescribed by law for persons guilty of perjury.

"SEC. 11. That the election board at each polling place, as soon as the polls are closed, shall immediately publicly proceed to open the ballot box and count and canvass the votes cast, and they shall thereupon, under their hands and seals, make out in duplicate a certificate of the result of said election, specifying the number of votes, in words and figures, cast for each candidate, and they shall then immediately carefully and securely seal up in one envelope one of said duplicate certificates and one of the registers of voters, all the ballots cast, and all affidavits made, and mail such envelope, with said papers inclosed, at the nearest post-office by registered mail, if possible, duly addressed to the governor of Alaska at his place of residence, with the postage prepaid thereon.

"The other duplicate certificate and register of voters, with the oaths of the judges of election, the judges of election shall at once seal up in an envelope addressed to the clerk of the district court for the division in which the precinct is situate, at his place of residence, with the postage thereon prepaid, and deposit the same in the nearest post-office by registered mail, if possible. And the said clerk shall, as soon as he receives the said duplicate certificate, at once make out and duly mail to the governor of Alaska a certified copy of such certificate.

"The clerks of the district court for the various divisions of Alaska and the governor of Alaska shall each retain and carefully preserve all such documents received by them until the end of the term for which the Delegate chosen has been elected.

"SEC. 12. That the governor, the surveyor-general, and the collector of customs for Alaska shall constitute a canvassing board for the Territory of Alaska to canvass and compile in writing the vote specified in the certificates of election returned to the governor from all the several election precincts as aforesaid.

"The said canvassing board shall commence the performance of its duties at the office of the governor within ten days after the third Tuesday of October in each year in which an election is held under and by virtue of this act, and shall continue with such work from day to day until the same is completed; and said canvass shall be publicly made.

"In case it shall appear to said board that no election return as hereinbefore prescribed has been received by the governor from any precinct in which an election has been held, the said board may accept in place thereof the certified copy of the certificate of election for such precinct received from the clerk of the court, and may canvass and compile the same with the other election returns.

"Said board, upon the completion of said canvass, shall declare the person who has received the greatest number of votes for Delegate to be the duly elected Delegate from Alaska for the term for which he has been so elected, and shall issue and deliver to him in writing under their hands and seals a certificate of his election.

"SEC. 13. That each newspaper in Alaska authorized to publish the notice of election provided for herein shall be entitled to receive therefor not more than ten dollars for the publication of the notice of any one election; that each commissioner in the Territory of Alaska is authorized to contract for the proper posting of all elections notices, as provided herein, in each voting precinct created in his said election district, and that not more than the sum of ten dollars shall be allowed at each election for the posting of said notices in any one voting precinct in Alaska; that not more than ten dollars at each election shall be allowed for the rental of a proper polling place in each voting precinct in Alaska; that each of the judges of election who shall qualify and serve as such in any precinct on said election day and each of the clerks of election in an incorporated town shall be entitled to a compensation of five dollars for all services performed.

"SEC. 14. That the compensation for said newspaper publications, the proper posting of said notices, the rental of said polling places, the fees of the judges and clerks of election in each precinct, together with the cost of securing a ballot box and the cost of necessary postage and stationery, shall be certified with proper vouchers and receipts attached by the various election officials to the judge of the district court in the said judicial division in which said voting precinct is situate, and the same shall be audited by said judge and shall be paid by the clerk of the court of said division out of the same fund and in the same manner as the incidental expenses of said district court are paid.

"SEC. 15. That any person who, by any means, shall hinder, delay, prevent, or obstruct any other person from qualifying himself to vote or from lawfully voting at any election herein provided for, or who shall knowingly personate and vote or attempt to vote in the name of any other person, or who shall vote more than once at the same election, or shall vote at a place where or at a time when he may not lawfully be entitled to vote, or shall do any unlawful act to secure an opportunity to vote, for himself or for any other person, or who, by or through any force, threat, intimidation, bribery, reward or offer thereof, unlawfully vote himself or procures another to vote, or prevents or induces another to refrain from exercising his right of suffrage, or induces by any means any officer of an election to do any unlawful act or omit to do his duty in any manner, or who, directly or indirectly, in any manner shall fraudulently change or cause to be changed the returns or the true and lawful result of any election hereunder or shall attempt to do the same, or who shall delay, cause to be delayed, or connive at the delay of election returns in any manner or attempt to do so, shall be guilty of a crime, and upon the conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars nor less than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned not more than three years, or both, in the discretion of the court, and pay the costs of the prosecution; and every officer of an election held hereunder who neglects to perform or violates any duty imposed upon him as such officer, or knowingly does any unauthorized act with the intent to affect the election or the result thereof, or who shall permit, make, or connive at any false count or certificate of election, or who shall conceal, withhold, destroy, or willfully delay the returns of election, or connive at the same being done, or who shall aid, counsel, or procure any person to do or attempt to do any act made a crime hereinbefore, or shall attempt to do any of the acts hereinbefore mentioned, shall be guilty of a crime, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than two hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court, and shall pay all costs of the prosecution; and jurisdiction of all such matters is hereby conferred upon the district court of Alaska.

"SEC. 16. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

"Amend the title so as to read: 'An act providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the Territory of Alaska.'"

And that the House agree to the same.

ABRAHAM L. BRICK,
LLEWELLYN POWERS,
JAMES T. LLOYD,
Managers on the part of the House.

KNUTE NELSON,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 956) providing for the election of a Delegate to the House of Representatives from the district of Alaska, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment in lieu of and as a substitute for the amendment of the House, the effect of which is as follows:

1. The words "Territory of Alaska" are substituted instead of "district of Alaska," in the enacting clause and elsewhere where the whole domain of Alaska is referred to.

2. Provision is made for the selection at the first election of a Delegate for a long and a short term, the Delegate for the short term to hold for the unexpired portion of the Fifty-ninth Congress and the one for the long term for the full term of the Sixtieth Congress. The Senate bill did not provide for a long and a short term, leaving an interregnum.

3. That each incorporated town shall constitute an election district, and when it has over 1,000 inhabitants the common council may divide it into two or more precincts; and that in such incorporated towns there shall be two clerks in addition to three judges upon the election board at each precinct; and that outside of the incorporated towns, in the election precincts in the country, two of the judges shall act as election clerks in addition to their duties as judges, instead of two election clerks at every precinct, as provided in the Senate bill, and instead of two of the judges acting as election clerks in the towns and country, as provided by the House amendment.

4. That each election board shall immediately send to the governor of Alaska all affidavits as well as a duplicate certificate and one register of voters and all ballots cast, instead of sending the affidavits to the district court in the district in which the precinct is located, thus giving the canvassing board, of which the governor is a member, the full knowledge of all that happened at the election, including such affidavits.

5. That the United States commissioner in each election district outside of the towns mentioned before shall divide the district into election precincts and provide the polling places and give election notices, as provided in the House amendment, instead of the district judges doing the work, as provided in the Senate bill.

6. That each candidate may have a watcher of the election in each precinct, which was not provided for in the Senate bill, but which was allowed in the House amendment.

7. That the House amendment provisions as to salary and recompense of Delagate are adopted instead of the Senate provisions, to wit, such Delegate to receive a salary of $5,000 per annum and, in lieu of all other allowances except clerk hire, the sum of $1,500.

8. That the governor, surveyor-general, and collector of customs for Alaska shall constitute a canvassing board instead of the Senate bill provision of the governor and one of the district judges of Alaska.

The House amendment to the Senate bill is, otherwise than in these changes mentioned, in effect adopted in the agreement of the conference.

A. L. BRICK,
LLEWELLYN POWERS,
JAS. T. LLOYD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. BRICK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

VIEWS OF MINORITY ON H. R. 17941.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I desire to file the views of the minority on the bill H. R. 17941.

The SPEAKER. Time was given, was it not, in which to file the views of the minority of this bill?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman that the proper way to do that is by filing the document at the desk.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Very well.

CHINESE-EXCLUSION LAWS.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. A privileged question, to report a resolution of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rises to a privileged question.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back House resolution 408, with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reports the following resolution with amendments, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it has been frequently alleged that the officials of the Bureau of Immigration, Department of Commerce and Labor, have been unnecessarily severe in the administration of the Chinese-exclusion laws so far as those laws affect the rights of the exempt classes of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent to enter the United States and its Territories: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the House of Representatives, for its information, all available documents, data, and statistics showing what action has been taken by the Bureau of Immigration in enforcing the Chinese-exclusion laws, and also the methods employed by Chinese coolie laborers and their agents in their efforts to surreptitiously gain admission into the United States and its Territories and to circumvent the provisions of said Chinese-exclusion laws.

With the following amendments:

Amend by striking out the preamble.

In line 3, after the word "Representatives," insert the words "if not incompatible with public interests."

In line 3 strike out the words "for its information."

In line 6, after the word "methods," insert the words "if any."

In line 6, after the word "employed," insert the words "to evade such laws."

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, and 9, beginning with the word "by," in line 6.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution as amended be passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on striking out the preamble.

The question was taken; and the preamble was stricken out.

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS ARTICLES ON PASSENGER STEAMERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 5514) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the carrying of dangerous articles on passenger steamers, a similar bill being on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting, after the word "passengers," wherever it occurs in said section, the words "for hire."

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to substitute that bill for H. R. 17879. This bill has been considered and unanimously reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in Report No. 3354, on file, which explains the matter fully.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GOULDEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. GOULDEN, a similar bill (H. R. 17879) was laid on the table.

MINORITY VIEWS ON IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I made myself quite plain when I addressed the Speaker a few minutes ago. The time had been given me to file the views, but the time had expired, and under these circumstances I ask unanimous consent to present the views of the minority.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may file the views of the minority on the bill H. R. 9741. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what the bill is?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18941) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that I ought to carry my determination to resist requests for unanimous consent to the extent of objecting to requests for filing minority views. I therefore shall not object to this or similar cases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with general debate I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a list of the newspapers and National Granges protesting against the free distribution of seed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the matter referred to:

Hon. R. R. HITT,
Representative from Illinois to House of Representatives:

As there was some discussion during the last Congress as to the appropriation for the free distribution of seeds to farmers, we, the undersigned farmers and voters, pray that you will give the following your consideration:

As that appropriation was created to distribute rare and uncommon seeds and as it only distributes common seeds that can be purchased by the farmer for two (2) or three (3) cents a packet, it is therefore only an expense to the United States Government and of no practical benefit to the farmer.

And as the Government is annually running millions in debt in order that the farmer may have a rural mail delivery, which is of some benefit, we, the undersigned farmers, pray that you use your influence to abolish the above-named appropriation.

ERNEST J. SIEGEL.	JOE M. FARRELL.
OLIVER H. LONG.	J. B. FOX.
POLEY CLAY.	GEO. LEPPER.
GEO. R. RANDALL.	L. E. RUSSELL.

Resolution adopted by the twentieth annual closing Wisconsin Farmers' Institute, held at Plymouth March 13, 14, and 15, 1906.

Resolved, That the Round-up Farmers' Institute of Wisconsin urge the Congressmen and Senators from Wisconsin to vote to abolish the free distribution of common seeds by the Government and to favor the appropriation of more money in the introduction of valuable new seeds and plants and in the improvement of plants and animals by breeding.

The following was adopted at the thirty-fourth annual session of the State Grange of Illinois, December 12–14, 1905, and we request your favorable attention thereto:

Resolved, As practical and independent farmers, that we call upon Congress to abolish its petty, annoying, and needless practice of broadcasting free and common garden seeds all over the rural districts, and that the control of seed distribution be placed under the Department of Agriculture and limited to experimental work.

NEW YORK, March 21, 1906.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As the time is nearly at hand when the appropriation for seed distribution will come before the House, we take the liberty of writing to you our final word on the question.

The Congressmen who have written to us stating they would vote for the appropriation are in two classes, one swayed entirely by their constituents, the other by the aspersions of the Department of Agriculture upon the seed trade and by their constituents. The first may be disposed of in a sentence. If it is wrong in essence to continue the practice, as they all admit, the responsibility is theirs; it is a weak admission that they will vote for it because urged to do so by some of their constituents.

The second phase of the situation requires more extended treatment. A letter from a Congressman, received only to-day, admitted the uselessness in themselves of the seeds for practical gardening purposes, but insists that they have a "stimulating effect." His letter continues: "So soon as the Agricultural Department has driven seedsmen to furnishing good seeds—that is to say, seeds that will grow—there will be no further occasion for a continuance of this gratuity." These are the sentiments of the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, repeatedly expressed recently; they are couched in almost the same language as he has used. Privately, to one seedsman, he took the opposite side. Publicly he has this year stated that he does not want the distribution of common garden seeds continued, asserts that Congress is to blame for it, and yet he charges that seedsmen are not sending out as good seeds as the Department and wants the distribution to continue until "the evil" is abolished.

At the hearing before your committee the adulterations of alfalfa, red clover, and Kentucky blue grass by some dealers was testified to by Doctor Galloway. A bill, we understand, is before Congress now aiming to control that matter; so it is disposed of. We ask how the free distribution of common garden seeds can affect it? Doctor Galloway testified: "We send out seed that must necessarily be better than the ordinary seed that the seedsmen can secure." In a recent circular letter to Congress relative to the methods of the seedsmen and the Department we explained away any vagueness contained in the foregoing statement. The effect of the testimony as it stands is to create a false impression, and it would not stand cross-examination by a practical seedsman. In answer to Mr. CANDLER, Doctor Galloway testified as follows: "Yes; we have men now who are as expert as any in the seed business. It is a regular business now." No, Doctor Galloway, it is not a regular business now, for the good reason that you have no competition; no customer who pays for your goods and is therefore a sharp critic. You yet lack the great essentials of a business. He does not claim to have better men, better methods of growing, better land, better facilities of any kind than the seedsmen, yet asserts the product is better.

The question, then, is, Do the seedsmen furnish good seeds? The answer is plain: It is to his interest to furnish the best obtainable, which every first-class seedsman does. About five years ago the contract for furnishing seeds was awarded to A. C. Nellis, of the so-called "New York Market Gardeners' Association," who had neither store nor warehouse, was simply a jobber, and could hardly be classed as a seedsman. Owing to the manner in which he was allowed to carry out his contract, the Department received just censure from all quarters. We believe he had the contract two years in succession. The experience of the Department at that time, which finally resulted in litigation with the contractor, is, we believe, largely responsible for the attitude exhibited toward the seedsmen now. For the past two or three years, then, the Department has been engaged in driving the seedsmen to furnish good seeds, as observed by the Congresman quoted.

Now, let us present some facts bearing on this. The assertion that the seedsmen do not send out good seeds—the best that careful, honest, watchful effort can produce or obtain—impeaches the veracity and insults the intelligence of the 40,000 market gardeners, 13,000 florists, 2,000 nurserymen, 10,000 private gardeners, 2,500 seed growers, and the vast number of high-class amateur growers in the country who purchase their supplies of seeds annually from the seedsmen. These men are critical to a degree; they pay for what they get, and their testimony is of more value than the ex parte statement of any bureaucrat. We venture to assert that not one of the professional gardeners or florists uses an ounce of seeds from the Department. The vegetables on sale in every market in the country, the flowers grown by florists, which are raised from seeds, the crops grown by the seed growers, the gardens of the critical amateurs, all refute in the strongest way possible the assertions and insinuations of the Secretary of Agriculture relative to the quality of the seeds sent out by seedsmen.

Now, for the sake of argument, we will suppose that the Department really means that by sending out good seeds they will raise the standard sent out by the seedsmen. To accomplish that object it is imperative that instead of the few varieties issued by them now, as testified to by Doctor Galloway, they must compete with the seedsmen in every item. Unless the user of seeds can get the varieties he wants from the Department he must get them from the seedsman. A package of free Government seeds now before us contains five varieties of vegetables. We offer approximately 500. We offer aproximately 1,200 varieties of flower seeds. To carry out the object aimed at the Department must be prepared to supply more even than that number of sorts, for other seedsmen have some which we do not offer, as we have some which they do not catalogue, and each house has its own clientage to a certain extent.

Instead, then, of sending out the little package, as at present, the Department, to meet the seedsmen squarely, would have to catalogue what they had and send catalogues to every prospective user of seeds in the country, asking them to send in their order for what they required. The failures to grow, and there would always be failures no matter what the quality of the seeds, would have to be replaced and the causes explained. The countless requests for advice would have to be answered, pamphlets of instructions would have to be issued, Congressmen would be deluged with complaints of failure arising from natural causes, negligence, or carelessness; they would be importuned even for vegetables to take the place of the prospective crop which failed. If the Department is not ready to face this eventuality, the men in charge are not sincere in their threats or they are not farsighted enough to see where their present attitude on the matter is leading them.

Is Congress ready and willing to go that far? If it is, we can promise that eventually the programme will have to be abandoned. If it is not, then it should have the courage to stop the further distribution of common seeds at once and confine the Department to scientific and true missionary work in plant industry.

In conclusion, we wish to say that we hope the justice of our appeal, coupled with the inherent sense of right in every man, will avail to cause the Congress to grant the relief we ask. We are few; we are weak; but we rely on Congress not to thrust us aside and trample on us. We respectfully request that you present our petition and our views to Congress.

Very respectfully, yours, PETER HENDERSON & Co.

Hon. F. H. GILLETT,
Representative Second Massachusetts District,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As seedsmen trying to do a legitimate business, we have for the past few years felt to a great extent the unreasonable and foolish waste of public money and an attempt by the Government to cripple an industry which needs support and encouragement.

We refer to the free distribution of seed packets by Congressmen here, there, and everywhere, without any knowledge as to whether they are destined to go into the ground or are carelessly thrown into the wastebasket.

We feel confident, owing to the strong appeals from seedsmen and also many others of high authority, that you will see the gross injustice of such an appropriation and will do all in your power to blot out such an unmistakable wrong.

Yours, respectfully, E. M. LYMAN & SON.

Hon. J. W. WADSWORTH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find clipping taken from a recent issue of the Democrat and Chronicle of our city, in regard to the abolition of the distribution of free seeds by the Government. We trust you fully realize the great injustice in this wholesale distribution of seeds in direct opposition to a legitimate industry, and knowing that you are a broad-minded man, have every reason to believe that this will receive your best efforts in stopping this gross outrage and aid in the elimination of any appropriation in that line, with the exception of what is necessary for the purpose of new and valuable varieties which is true text of the Department.

We remain, yours, very truly, CROSMAN BROTHERS.

[Inclosure.]

THE FREE-SEED HUMBUG.

It is announced from Washington that the House Committee on Agriculture has stricken out, this year, the appropriation for free-seed distribution, and, unless it shall be replaced by the House, the annual folly of expending nearly $300,000 for a practically useless purpose will be omitted.

It is very difficult to find a reasonable excuse or apology for the annual distribution of seeds. It has come to be regarded by Members of Congress, by the supposed beneficiaries, and, indeed, by everybody except the growers who raise and sell the seeds, as a hugh joke. In times past the sending of a few packages of white beans or grass seed was regarded as a personal recognition of a constituent by a Member of Congress, and it proved to be a convenient method of reminding the constituent that he had not been forgotten. The Government paid for the seeds and they were carried free under the Congressman's frank. Then it grew into a gigantic business in itself, although of little value to the individual recipient of the bounty. It is stated that over 50,000,000 packages of seeds were sent out last year, the appropriation being $290,000. To this must be added the cost of transportation and expenses incident to shipment.

It goes without saying that, so far as the legitimate seed industry is concerned, it brings in a competitor who is not handicapped by the necessity of selling the seeds, and to the extent to which they are furnished free the industry is affected. The truth seems to be that the original design of the seed distribution has been sadly perverted. The seeds first sent out from the Patent Office were of new and presumably choice varieties, obtained by the Government for the purpose of improving the quality of grains, fruits, and vegetables. These new varieties of seeds were greatly appreciated by the recipients, and the general results are known to have been beneficial in the introduction and propagation of new varieties.

All that is now changed. Seeds are bought in the open market in bulk, and the matter of value or novelty is not taken greatly into account. Thus, a farmer might receive a package of beans which he had himself raised and sold. But he would no longer labor under the hallucination that they would aid him in improving his seed. There will be little regret if the action of the House Committee in striking out the appropriation stands.

RAVENNA, OHIO, March 12, 1906.

Hon. THOMAS E. SCROGGY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We believe the Committee on Agriculture has acted wisely in expunging from the general agricultural bill the appropriation for the purchase of seeds for free distribution. We hope when this bill comes up for passage you will use your influence to prevent this unjust appropriation from being incorporated in it.

This unwise distribution of seeds is not only a serious hindrance to the legitimate seed trade, but is also a useless expenditure of public funds. If the seedsmen of the country had this trade, which should by rights be theirs, it would add quite a revenue to the Post Office Department and help in a measure to make up the deficiency in this Department.

Hoping you will give your good office to sustain the action of the Committee on Agriculture, and assuring you that we, as well as thousands of our friends will appreciate such action, we are,

Very respectfully, yours,

FORD SEED CO.
J. H. FORD, Manager.

PHILADELPHIA, March 30, 1906.

Hon. E. F. ACHESON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We ask your aid in the abolishment of the annual appropriation for the distribution of free seeds. We not only consider the distribution of common garden seeds unjust to seedsmen, who conduct a legitimate business, and pay large amounts each year to the Government for duties on importations and for postage on catalogues, merchandise, etc., but also an unjust expenditure of the public money, which could be used to great advantage for other purposes. It is also a fact that the law which created the Department of Agriculture does not authorize the distribution of common seeds, the intention only being to introduce in the United States such promising varieties as were being grown successfully in foreign countries and thus test their adaptability for use in this country.

Besides being a great waste of the public money and class legislation, it is also a great burden to the mail service, and the franking privileges cost the Government a large sum of money each year.

We have no objection to the expenditure of $40,000 for purchasing seeds of new and rare varieties, but earnestly request your aid in abolishing this yearly appropriation for the distribution of common garden seeds.

Thanking you in advance for your efforts in this direction, we have the honor to remain,

Yours, very truly,

HENRY A. DREER (Incorporated).

NEW YORK, March 2, 1906.

Hon. TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We noticed in the public press that a majority of the House Committee on Agriculture has reported unfavorably, and so struck out from the agricultural appropriation bill the item of $242,000 designed to continue for another year the free-seed distribution. It is needless to say that the seed trade, and we believe all right-minded people, view with pleasure this action by the committee. We sincerely hope and trust that the bill will pass the House as presented by the committee, and we respectfully request, if consistent with your ideas on the subject, that you use your best efforts to have the bill passed as reported by the committee.

Considering the manner in which this pernicious practice has been ventilated the past few years, we feel that it is unnecessary for us to enlarge upon it at the present time. We know that your sense of justice and fair play will operate to convince you that the action taken by the committee should be indorsed.

Yours, respectfully, PETER HENDERSON & Co.

SCRANTON, PA., March 21, 1906.

Hon. T. H. DALE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I write to ask you to use your vote against the free distribution of seeds. One of our Scrantor papers had a long article against this unappreciative expense. The great majority who receive these common seed do not appreciate free-gift business. The law has become an abuse instead of its original intent. Our Government ought to be above such an abuse of its trust.

The original law, enacted in 1862, authorized the Department of Agriculture to distribute new and valuable seeds and plants only. This authority has been stretched into annually increasing proportions and has departed entirely from the idea embodied in the law. No attempt has been made to work strictly along the lines laid down originally; only the commonest kinds of seeds have been sent out, and in such enormous quantities as to seriously hamper the postal service. They have been distributed at random, causing a reckless waste of public money.

Trusting you may look into this,
I am, very truly, G. R. CLARK.

DEAR SIR: Will you kindly secure a printed pamphlet covering examination of employees of the Department of Agriculture by the House Committee on Agriculture which took place the early part of January and has since been printed. We should also like to have a copy of the proposed appropriation bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture. We trust you will use your efforts against any appropriation for the free distribution of seeds, as it is a farce without any practical good, either to the trade or the beneficiary. We have taken the liberty to write this letter to you because our interests are in your district, and believe we are seeking information through the proper channel.

Thanking you in advance for whatever information you can give us, we remain,

MY DEAR SIR: At the regular meeting of the Horticultural Society of New York, held on March 14, the subjoined resolution was presented in council and unanimously adopted. Acting under instructions from the council, I beg leave to transmit copy of said resolution to you:

Resolved, That we view with satisfaction the probable discontinuance of the free distribution of garden seeds by the United States Government. We respectfully urge upon our Representatives in Congress, and the United States Senators from New York, that they use their best efforts to have this practice stopped. We denounce it as a useless waste of public money and flagrant perversion of the aims and intent of the law creating the Department of Agriculture.

MY DEAR SIR: I understand the bill to abolish the free distribution of seeds and plants is about to be presented before your honorable body.

If you can see your way clear by casting your vote to abolish the same, I will appreciate it very much.

First. Free seeds are injurious to my business, by the Government giving seeds to consumers.

Second. I don't believe it does much good to anyone receiving the same.

Third. The cost to the Government is very much.

Fourth. The Government loses a great deal of money by mailing the same, and losing in a commercial way by dealers not furnishing the same to consumers.

Fifth. The stock of seeds furnished has not proven meritorious.

Your kind consideration in the above matter will be appreciated by me.

Yours, very truly,

MARTIN C. RIBSAM.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand from a reliable source that the impression is sought to be created in Congress that the seeds distributed by the Department of Agriculture are better than those sent out by seed houses, and thus a reason is given for the continuance of the practice.

We wish to say that the seed houses were in the business of growing and distributing seeds before the Department, that the Department obtains its supply from the seed houses, and it is therefore difficult to understand how the output can be better. Briefly stated, the method of the seed houses is as follows: They control their own stocks, they keep trial grounds for testing them, they have a clientage that pays for the seed, and if it is not good they hear from it, so that of necessity they must see to it that only the best is sent to their customers. In the growing season they send representatives to examine crops and see that they are true to type; in fact, every care that long experience and invested capital can suggest is adopted to safeguard their interests and the interests of their customers.

The Department of Agriculture sends out a circular letter to the seed houses asking for an offer of surplus stock, and if it can not obtain in this way what is wanted, we believe a contract is made with a grower for the item or items. We ask, then, in what way can the seeds be better? We submit as a reasonable proposition that the chances are infinitely greater that the stock sent out by the seedsmen is the better of the two.

We take the liberty of sending this statement to you because of the underhand, vicious attack which is made upon what is the corner stone of our business, i. e., our reputation, and it shows to what ends some one is willing to go in an effort to continue the free distribution of seeds by the Government.

Yours, very truly,

MY DEAR MR. WADSWORTH: I do not know how you feel about this matter of the bill now before Congress regarding the free distribution of seeds. I have always considered that there was much abuse and useless expense connected with this matter, and it seems to me it needs decided restriction in the interests of political righteousness, and I am pleased to range myself on the side of such curtailment as shall leave only opportunity for the distribution of rare and foreign seeds which it may be desirable to introduce to our people.

Cordially, yours,

JAS. H. JACKSON.

Honorable CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE,
House of Representatives, Washington.

SIR: Having noticed in the papers that your committee wish to stop appropriations for free seeds, I desire to give testimony in favor of such a measure. Since 1852, when I made my father's garden in New York, to the present time I have been a recipient of "free seeds." The first were "superior foreign" field grasses, only practical for experiment stations for trial and report. Then came annually from our Member of Congress a small package of garden seeds, as one would give a little sop to a pet dog under the table. I have now on my desk such a package—four little papers of seeds, worth not over 5 cents, but costing taxpayers nearly $5. Now, I have been a voter for fifty years, and in all the campaigns I have seen I never heard seeds mentioned. Nothing, to my knowledge, ever secured a vote but hard cash or whisky or promise of appointment. I have never had more than 5 cents worth of seeds at any time, but though born a Democrat I would not have sold my vote to Bryan and his 16 to 1 for a whole carload. I can't see what a candidate for Congress expects to gain for 5 cents in seeds. City people don't want any, and since he has no choice in selection, what can a countryman do with four little papers of seeds? One or two he may have no use for, and there is not enough seeds in the others to do any good. If he is anything of a gardener, his seed bill may not be less than $2 and may exceed $20. Five cents worth of seed to a garden is of no more use than one finger of whisky to a backwoodsman. The campaign of last year developed a better plan. I received several "visiting" cards from political candidates, some from entire strangers, requesting my vote. These cards appealed to my intelligence, and I actually looked up the record of a man I had never heard of and voted for him. Therefore I make the suggestion, let Members of Congress send their visiting cards (with full titles) instead of seeds to hold down their constituents. A personal card at Christmas would turn the heart of a doubtful voter. What can be expected for 5 cents in seeds? Have done with it!

While your committee is anxious to save the people money, please ask them to examine that rare old plant "the Botanical Garden," at foot of the Capitol. It needs root pruning and transplanting into the Agricultural Department. It is nothing but an overgrown vegetable sponge for public money, and internally as hideous and full of mystery as ergot in a cornfield.

Respectfully,

OTIS BIGELOW.

DEAR SIR: We understand that the matter of the annual appropriation for the purchase of seeds, intended for free distribution by the Government, is now being considered by Congress, and we believe that the present is a most favorable time to urge objections to this most unjust and iniquitous public measure.

There are a hundred sound reasons for permanently abolishing this system of "graft," and not the shadow of an excuse for further burdening the nation with such an unnecessary annual expenditure.

No other people on the face of the earth would submit to such a discreditable use of the public money, and the sooner it is discontinued the better for the self-respect of every American citizen.

The abolition of free seeds would doubtless interfere with the more or less lucrative positions of a large number of employees, and it may be that some favorites of both sexes might object to such a change, but the fact remains that the whole system of free-seed distribution, as at present conducted by the Department of Agriculture, is an outrageous abuse. The great mass of public sentiment is utterly opposed to it, and we believe that in no manner can you better serve the interests of Massachusetts than by opposing the appropriation for free seeds.

Hon. MARSHALL VAN WINKLE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Kindly permit me to request your kind attention to the pending appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department, which includes an item for the free distribution of seeds, which has grown into an abuse, and which, in my estimation, should be stopped.

The original intention of making such an appropriation was to distribute new, rare, and foreign seeds which might grow in the climate and soil found in various parts of our country and become indigenous there.

The abuse which has grown out of a proper law consists in the distribution of common, ordinary garden seeds, which cost the Government several hundred thousand dollars, besides seriously encumbering the mails.

I also object to this free distribution of common, ordinary garden seeds, on the ground that it is contrary to public policy in this that of all the seeds distributed only a very small proportion are accepted and sown, and serve only as a petty courtesy extended to voters by their Congressman, and even as such, a package of common seeds must be a failure.

I therefore beg leave to request that you will kindly lend your influence toward an abatement of this abuse of an originally good law, and that you will not vote for the means of distributing common seeds, so easily purchased at small expense of the exact kind and variety wanted, in violation of the original intent of the law, to induce experiments in making new, rare, and foreign growths indigenous in our soil.

The present tendency to make our Government the father of us all should be checked, unless the equality of all citizens is maintained by a free distribution of whatever product may be desired, agricultural or industrial, by a Congressman's constituents.

Very truly, yours,

E. P. REICHHELM,

JEANNETTE, PA., R. F. D. No. 1, March 14, 1906.

Hon. GEORGE F. HUFF.

DEAR SIR: Excuse me for taking the liberty of writing to you, but I think the Government free-seed distribution is a matter that should be done away with, and I hope you will use your influence to have it done. My experience with the seeds sent out is that they are of a very ordinary kind, and I can not see the object in sending them out. As I never yet knew anyone to receive seeds that was not able to buy all they might need, so there is apparently no benefit in that way. And as to benefit in the trial of them, there can be none, as all are old varieties and well tried long ago. In case new sorts were sent out, some good might result; but, as it is done now, I can see no benefit whatever, but a cost on the Government that should not be.

In case the Government has money that it must get rid of, let us have it for our public schools or our public roads. In this way the people will be benefited. With the free-seed nuisance no benefit is received by them. I trust you interest yourself in the matter and try to correct this evil. I think old Westmoreland would feel proud to know that through its Representative this free-seed matter was knocked into oblivion.

Very respectfully,

E. BUSHYAGER.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am very much interested and encouraged by the fact that the Committee on Agricultural Appropriations has stricken from the bill the item for the purchase of seeds to be used in the free-seed distribution for 1907. I hope you will do all you can to prevent the reinstating of this appropriation. The Government has done a great work in studying plant diseases and in aiding the farmer in his effort to do farming on scientific principles, and I certainly would be glad to see this good work continue, and the distribution of a moderate quantity of plants and seeds which are new and desirable for certain localities would no doubt do more good than harm; but the wholesale distribution of common varities of seeds is unfair and unjust and fully as uncalled for as the distribution of dry goods and groceries, and even more so, for we all use dry goods and groceries, but comparatively few use seeds.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,

SIR: I take the liberty to call your attention to the present movement in Congress against Congressional distribution of seeds.

So generally has this distribution been opposed in recent years and so many are the arguments against it that I presume my writing to you may be quite unnecessary, but I wish to say most emphatically that I, in common, I believe, with all intelligent agriculturists and a great majority of all progressive farmers and gardeners, am strongly opposed to such distribution. Very briefly stated, the principal considerations which lead me to this point of view are:

1. The public money so used is largely wasted, as many of the seeds distributed are never sown.

2. The law creating the Department of Agriculture does not authorize the free distribution of common garden seeds.

3. The law providing for such distribution is class legislation, and therefore in itself pernicious.

4. The mail service is overburdened with these free seeds, the distribution of which is responsible for a considerable share of the annual deficit in the postal service of the country.

5. I know from experience and from talking with intelligent farmers and gardeners that many of them resent this paltry attempt at governmental benefaction.

6. Under the conditions now existing it seems to me there can be little doubt that only new and promising varieties of seeds should be distributed: that these should first be tested as to their adaptation to local conditions in the experiment stations of the several States, and that those found valuable only should be distributed through the experiment stations or by the General Government in cooperation with the stations.

Believing that you will give these points due consideration and that consideration will lead you to register your vote against Congressional free-seed distribution, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

HONORABLE OFFICIAL: For one being a citizen of your district and interested in the general welfare and advancement of (this, ours, "all of us") the American nation, I would like to give you my opinion in regard to appropriations for free distribution of seeds, which I consider to be an example of very poor management, and object to it for the following reasons:

First. The seeds sent out are only the commonest sorts; they should be first class.

Second. Those best acquainted with the postmasters and other officials get the greater bulk of the seeds, while they are well able to buy; the poorer, less informed, most needy people receive only a small portion.

Third. Having used the seeds, but a small per cent report the result of their experiments.

Fourth. The reports received do not reach back to many of the users of seeds; but little is learned by those who most need enlightenment.

It is a random affair and a reckless waste of money.

Hoping you will give the question due thought and consideration, and that you will use your best efforts to bring about a better state of affairs,

I remain, respectfully,

W. BARTO.

MY DEAR SIR: Through your courtesy I am once more in receipt of a packet of seeds from our Uncle Samuel's garden. Might I ask you to see the dear old gentleman and tell him that while appreciating his great kindness I think he had better go out of this seed-distributing business and use the money it costs in some other way. And while about it you may also say to him that I think he is overgenerous in too many other directions and he would do well to draw in his purse strings a little. It would seem as though a man of his age and experience ought to have learned that ill-advised and lavish spending of money seldom does good to anybody.

To be serious, I hope that your honorable body, by refusing to make an appropriation, will do away with the miserable practice of giving away seeds at the public expense. From something I have seen in the newspapers I conclude that you are personally in favor of such action, or rather nonaction. Be assured that you will have the hearty approval of all sensible citizens.

MY DEAR SIR: I write to ask you to use your influence against the appropriation for the free distribution of common garden seeds, which entails an expense of from $250,000 to $300,000 per annum on the Government, with very little benefit resulting therefrom to the farmers or people at large, and is a measure that, in my opinion, should be done away with; the sooner the better. It looks very much like class legislation and a waste of public money, and as far as my observation goes more than one-half of the seed sent out are never used. Hoping that this will meet your view of the case,

I am, yours, respectfully,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Allow me to congratulate your committee on its efforts to abolish the free distribution of common garden seeds. That has long been the worst old fake perpetrated upon the American farmer. Individual and organized farmers have for years been a unit against it. The agricultural press unanimously supports your committee in its recommendations to put a stop to this hoary fraud.

I am writing this letter to each member of your committee, and trust it will be brought to the personal attention of each Member of the House. I believe it safe to say that, if this question were submitted to a vote by mail of every American farmer, the result would be 10 to 1 in favor of abolishing the free distribution of common garden seeds. And this judgment is based on a most intimate knowledge of the farmers' views and needs in every nook and corner of the United States. Congress can not do a more popular act, so far as agriculture is concerned, than to abolish the scandal of "free seeds."

Yours, very truly,

THREE RIVERS, MICH., March 30, 1906.

Hon. JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
Chairman House Committee on Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: We have noted with pleasure the fact that your committee has reported adversely to the free-seed measure, which for so many years has been a positive detriment to progressive American agriculture, and had hoped that this was the end of that disgraceful phase of the Agricultural Department's work, a work imposed upon it by Congressional action and never sought for by the Department itself. But we are now advised that a concerted effort is being made to restore that measure to the appropriation bill. We write to add our protest against such restoration. From our point of view, the measure is detrimental to the very purpose it professes to serve. It is not only harmful in its effects of lowering the regard in which the public should hold the Department of Agriculture, but it actually stands in the way of that broader progress which might be secured by the Department of Agriculture could it have the moneys thus appropriated to use in the encouragement of the cultivation of foreign crops susceptible to development in the arid and semiarid regions of the country. This is but one phase of the question. Another phase, and one which appeals especially to the periodical publisher of the present day, is the relation of this misappropriation of funds to the question of the postal deficit. Second-class mail matter is charged with the responsibility of that deficit, whereas we believe that if the mails were relieved of all superfluous matter—free seeds and the like—there would be no deficit, and the press of the country would be relieved of the odium thus charged.

But over and above all objections of this kind is the greater objection of the misuse of public funds and the interference of Government in that which is essentially a matter of fair competition in the business world. We know we need present no argument to you on these points; we simply refer to them to add the weight of numbers to the almost universal protest against the measure under discussion.

Trusting that your committee will persevere in its resolution to stop free-seed distribution by the Government, we remain,

Very truly, yours,

THE KELLOGG PUBLISHING COMPANY.
W. H. BURKE, Secretary.

THE PRACTICAL FARMER,
Philadelphia, March 13, 1906.

Hon. GEORGE R. HUFF,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As editor of a leading farm paper of Pennsylvania and previously for sixteen or more years an officer of an experiment station, I have had a very extensive correspondence with the farmers in all parts of the country, amounting to many thousands of letters annually.

In all these years I have never known a farmer who did not ridicule the free distribution of common garden seeds by the Government.

Since the House Committee on Agriculture has wisely decided to strike out the appropriation for this purpose, it is to be hoped that when the agricultural bill comes before the House this will be agreed to and this waste of money stopped.

When, in addition to the $290,000 appropriated last year for these seeds, we take into consideration the loading of the mails with them and the wages of the host of employees engaged solely in this useless work, the seed distribution costs the Government fully $1,000,000 or more. This would far more than pay the additional appropriation that is proposed for the State experiment stations, which have been the greatest power ever devised for the uplifting of our agriculture and would enable Congress also to give aid to the farmers' institutes in the various States, which have everywhere proved their value as an educational force.

May we not ask your influence in carrying into effect the decision of your committee? I am sure that the enactment would be one of the most popular ever made.

With great respect, I am, yours, truly,

W. F. MUSSEY,
Editor of Practical Farmer.

[Washington Post, Saturday, March 10, 1906.]

SEEDS ARE EXPENSIVE—COST OF DISTRIBUTION FIGURES OUT VERY LARGE—TRIPLE VALUE OF PRODUCT—APPROPRIATION IS EATEN UP TRAVELING, SALARIES IN WASHINGTON AND THOSE OUTSIDE, ASSEMBLING AND MAILING—DILIGENT INQUIRY FAILS TO SHOW WHY IT SHOULD REQUIRE SO GREAT OUTLAY.

It costs the United States nearly three times as much to distribute seeds, bulbs, and trees to farmers and planters as it costs to purchase the commodities.

Figures in the report of B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, for 1905, show that the Government paid $245,000 for the handling of $90,000 worth of seeds. The items of salaries, traveling expenses, assembling and mailing, and miscellaneous amount to $2.70 for every $1 in actual value.

Congress has been asked to remedy this condition, which is regarded as a travesty on good management by the agricultural journals and societies in various parts of the country.

In 1905 there were miscellaneous authorizations amounting to $4,359; traveling expenses, $7,034; salaries in Washington, $62,471; salaries outside, $8,608; contract for assembling and mailing, $41,926, and various other costs of handling, bringing the total nearly to $90,000 of the $340,000 appropriation.

FACTS ARE NOT EXPLAINED.

It has not been explained to the satisfaction of searching inquirers why so much traveling and miscellaneous expenses are needed and why the salary bill could not be cut down, and for this reason there is strong antipathy to the annual appropriation. But Congress, they say, has a tender spot in its heart for the seed-distribution industry and has held aloof.

VIEWS OF PROFESSOR GALLOWAY.

Professor Galloway recently testified before the House Committee on Agriculture, furnishing this information. The committee's position was defined by the chairman in these words:

"We are heartily in accord with the efforts of the Department to introduce new or rare plants, grains, fruits, or vegetables, and for that purpose have recommended an appropriation of $40,000, which is all they can comfortably expend in this work. But when it comes to peas and beans and corn and turnips we feel the country is sufficiently well-informed to go it alone, without expending a quarter of a million dollars for this purpose."

[Washington Post, Sunday, March 11, 1906.]

FREE-SEED DISTRIBUTION—PERIODICAL ATTEMPT BY CONGRESS TO CUT OFF THE GRAFT.

Another of the annual Congressional farces is now on the boards. This time it is the distribution of seeds by the Agricultural Department at the command of Senators and Representatives. Nobody believes in it. The Agricultural Department is convinced the money spent for it is wasted. The Congressmen would hail a relief from the business of distributing the seeds with no attempt to conceal their satisfaction. The people would never know it had happened save for the reduction of the budget by about $200,000.

Yet the fear of dissatisfaction among the constituents represented at the Capitol is so great that it is not at all certain the abuse can be stopped now, even though the House Committee on Agriculture has stricken the seed clause from the appropriation bill.

As a matter of fact, not a tenth of these seeds are either asked for or desired. Private secretaries cuddle their brains to give them away to advantage. A great proportion is never given away, but is collected—it is just as well to speak out with the truth—by employees of the Capitol and sold. The farmer does not care to experiment with a handful of middle-grade corn when he has the planting of a hundred acres on hand. The farmer's wife does not care to sow mignonette and grow red poppies in her flower beds. It is safe prediction that if this distribution were stopped to-day not ten voters to the district would complain.

The work of the Agricultural Department is of the greatest importance to the whole nation. It is correspondingly expensive. To weigh it down with an allowance of more than $150,000 for work which has no place in the general scheme of departmental activity, and which the Department believes to be practically useless, is an extremely undesirable use of the nation's funds. In 1839 there was no Department of Agriculture, but that year Congress appropriated $1,000 to enable the Commissioner of Patents to purchase and distribute rare and valuable seeds and to publish agricultural statistics.

In 1893 the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of seed had reached $150,000. Secretary J. Sterling Morton looked upon this free distribution as petty graft, and he refused to "purchase and distribute." But Congress made the distribution mandatory, and each year the appropriation has been increased, until for the current twelve months it is $250,000, in round figures. This year the agricultural bill carries $7,000,000. There have been sporadic attempts in the past to do away with the free-seed graft, but they have always failed, not because a majority of the Members favor the practice, but because most of them are afraid their constituents would object. And yet the action of the committee last week was very largely in response to resolutions adopted by the State granges in Illinois, New York, and Connecticut, urging the stoppage of the free-seed distribution.

[The Union-Sun, Lockport, N. Y., March 12, 1906.]

SEEDS—GRAFT DIES HARD AT WASHINGTON—SMALL AMOUNT OF APPROPRIATIONS EVER REACHES THE FARMERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12, 1906.

The ridicule heaped by the press and public on Congressional free-seed distribution has encouraged the majority of the House Committee on Agriculture to believe that their efforts to stop this great abuse will be successful, and that the House will support their action in refusing to make any appropriation for the distribution of common flower and vegetable seeds. This graft dies hard. One of the most pernicious forms of wasting public money, without a legitimate excuse and almost without a defender, nevertheless it clings to Congress like a mother to a newborn babe, and for many years Chairman WADSWORTH, of the Committee on Agriculture, has been trying in vain to pry it loose. The report of B. T. Galloway, Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, for the fiscal year of 1905, tells the story of why the country is bled for $300,000 annually on this account. In it appears these items: "Salaries, in Washington $62,471; outside of Washington $8,608; traveling expenses, $7,064; contract for assembling and mailing seeds, $41,924." A A large number of persons are thus employed in the seed distribution, and every time Congress proposes to abolish this graft they weep copiously on the shirt fronts of the tender-hearted Members, who finally shrug their shoulders and say, "The public pays the freight," and vote for the appropriation.

The report of Chief Galloway contains much valuable data on this subject, but a great deal is omitted and would undoubtedly make interesting reading. For instance, it notes that during the year there were "miscellaneous authorizations amounting to $4,359," but no hint is given as to the character of these authorizations. It might be thought that less than a hundred thousand dollars worth of peas, beans, corn, etc., could be bought and distributed from Washington, yet it seems to have required $7,064 for "traveling expenses." Who traveled, where, and why? It also appears that "miscellaneous seeds" to the amount of $6,390 and "miscellaneous plants" to the amount of $3,864 were purchased and distributed.

Nothing could show the wastefulness of the seed distribution better than the cost of handling the seeds. The total expenditure of the Department of Agriculture on this account was $245,374. Of this amount only $90,979 was expended in the purchase of seeds, bulbs, trees, and plants. In other words, it cost $2.70 to distribute every dollar's worth of seeds, plants, bulbs, and trees, without counting the immense cost to the Post-Office Department of delivering them. The flower and vegetable seeds are put up in packets. For these seeds $66,177 was expended, while to packet them by machinery and mail them cost $41,924, or more than two-thirds what the seeds cost.

But the item which most needs explaining is that of "miscellaneous expenses," which are set down at $15,961. After salaries, traveling expenses, purchase and mailing seeds, miscellaneous authorizations, telegrams, freight, express, hauling, gas and electric light, telephones, and fuel had all been set down, it was still necessary to include $15,961 for "miscellaneous expenses."

From the above it appears that although a contract was made under which $41,924 was paid for "assembling and mailing" $66,177 worth of vegetable and flower seeds, the Government paid, in addition, $71,079 in salaries in and out of Washington; $7,064 traveling expenses; $3,359 "miscellaneous authorizations," and $15,961 "miscellaneous expenses." At the end of the distribution about 50,000 packets of seed were on hand.

[The Washington Post, Monday, March 12, 1906.]

TO CURTAIL FREE SEED—HOUSE COMMITTEE WORKING TO STOP DISTRIBUTION—SECRETARY WILSON'S VIEWS—HE SENDS REPRESENTATIVE TAWNEY A RÉSUMÉ OF WHAT DEPARTMENT HAS DONE—LAYS BLAME OF SENDING OUT MISCELLANEOUS PACKAGES UPON CONGRESS—MEMBERS DEMAND IT FOR CONSTITUENTS.

In their efforts to suppress the free-seed abuse the majority of the House Committee on Agriculture will have the support of Representative JAMES A. TAWNEY, of Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Speaker CANNON is against further appropriations for the free distribution of peas, beans, corn, turnips, and peanuts, and, while the members of the Committee on Agriculture are fully informed on the subject, "Uncle Joe" thinks they should be backed up by others not on the committee.

Consequently, Mr. TAWNEY is securing much valuable and interesting data on the subject, which he will present to the House should there be an attempt to override the committee. He has received an interesting letter from the Secretary of Agriculture reviewing the history of the appropriations for this purpose. Secretary Wilson practically takes the ground that Congress and not the Department is responsible for the growth of this form of graft, and that if the Members of Congress are willing to forego their little packets of seeds he is more than willing.

FIRST APPROPRIATION $1,000.

The Secretary says the first appropriation of seeds was in 1839, when the Commissioner of Patents was allowed $1,000 for collecting agricultural statistics and "the purchase of seeds of new and rare varieties of plants." From 1839 to and including 1865 the total amount expended in collecting statistics and supplying seeds was $672,724. The appropriation for the current year for seeds alone is $290,000, or almost one-half of the total amount expended in the twenty-six years from 1839 to 1865 in the encouragement of agriculture.

Secretary Wilson notes that "the purpose of the early legislation for the introduction and distribution of seeds was to introduce into this country seeds of new and improved varieties and of new crops, in order to increase the horticultural and agricultural products of the United States." As long as it was confined to this purpose great good was accomplished. But he continues:

"As the demand for the new seeds being introduced by the Department increased, such demands naturally found expression in requests made to Senators and Members of Congress, and in course of time the number of these requests became so great that it was imposible to fill them with strictly new varieties of seeds; hence the practice began of sending out larger quantities of packages of vegetable seeds."

SOME GOOD ACCOMPLISHED.

Secretary Wilson thinks considerable good has been accomplished in this direction, but adds: "The distribution of such seeds increased, however, so that by about 1890 it had become the most prominent feature of the distribution, and, although the distribution of new varieties of field crops was not entirely lost sight of, the proportion of such seeds introduced was exceedingly small, and the original purpose of the legislation, namely, the introduction of new and improved varieties, was not kept prominently in the foreground." Acordingly, in 1897, Congress specified that $20,000 should be used for the introduction of new crops from abroad, and a separate section of foreign seed and plant introduction was established, which has done much good work.

Secretary Wilson thus compares the "graft" seed distribution with that which is recognized as legitimate and proper. "There is no doubt," he says, "that, although the amount expended distinctly for this work of introducing and developing new crops is relatively but a small proportion of the entire appropriation, the relative amount of good done by this branch of the work is far in excess of that accomplished by the mere distribution of miscellaneous standard varieties of vegetable and flower seeds, which can be purchased from any seedsman."

In conclusion, the Secretary informs Chairman TAWNEY that, as far as he is aware, there is no other government "that buys ordinary miscellaneous vegetable and flower seeds from growers and dealers and then distributes them to its citizens."

GOVERNMENT SEEDS.

One of the earliest abuses to spring up under the sway of the Federal Government was the distribution of seeds. The country at the time was much more agricultural, as a whole, than it is now, and very few politicians held their positions without the votes of farmers. It was the fashion, and still is to some extent, to set them apart in a class by themselves as especially worthy of consideration and as entitled to privileges and immunities accorded to none other. Men like Webster, Clay, and Everett were accustomed to deliver set orations at cattle shows and county fairs, and one of the most laborious items of a Congressman's duties came to be directing and mailing seed packages to his constituents. The theory at the outset seems to have been that the Government was in a better position than the farmers to find out which were the best varieties of plants and vegetables, and better able to procure the seeds, and that by its agency in the matter there would be improvement in the varieties cultivated.

Needless to say, there have been every year bushels of worthless seed distributed that never came to anything, still other bushels that were never planted, and that there have never been any benefits to anyone at all commensurate with the vast expense involved. Not only so, but there has never been under our system of government any possible justification for such expenditure. There is just as much reason why every farmer should be furnished with a fresh stock of cattle in the spring, to improve the breed, or a new set of tools, or every lawyer be presented with the statutes, or everyone else supplied with the implements of his trade or profession as that a farmer should be given his garden seeds.

There have been attempts made from time to time to do away with the practice, and this year, at last, the Committee on Agriculture by one majority has voted to leave any provision for seed out of the appropriation bill. Strange to say, the Republicans all voted against seeds and the Democrats for them, wholly reversing the traditional attitude of the parties toward paternalism. It would doubtless be found on examination that the Republicans come mostly from cities and manufacturing sections, and the Democrats from rural districts. Local considerations, when it comes to votes, have been known to be of more weight than general political principles, as when Massachusetts wants the duty taken off raw materials and Louisiana to have it kept on sugar. "Our opinions are parcels of our fortunes."

There is little reason to believe that the farmers of the country will regret or resent the nonarrival of the few seed packages they have been accustomed to receive, and it is matter of congratulation that at least one hoary and time-honored abuse has been abolished.

[Niagara Courier, Saturday, March 17, 1906.]

We see it stated that it costs the United States nearly three times as much to distribute seeds, bulbs, and trees to farmers and planters as it costs to purchase the commodities. Figures in the report of B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, for 1905 show that the Government paid $245,000 for the handling of $90,000 worth of seeds. The items of salaries, traveling expenses, assembling and mailing, and miscellaneous amount to $2.70 for every $1 in actual value. Will it do it?

[The News Leader, Richmond and Manchester, Va.]

Probably a good deal of light is thrown on the discussion about free distribution of Government seed through Members of Congress by the following self-explanatory communication:

DUANE, VA., March 15.

EDITOR THE NEWS LEADER: Your article upon "Free seed" leads me to say that I have been the postmaster here for fifteen years and can report as follows: Each year a great mass of packages come under frank and about half of them are addressed to persons that are dead or moved away—some of them ten to fifteen years—yet the seed continues to come. Not ten in a hundred persons care a fig for them and take them reluctantly. One man said he would give them to his fowls.

The original intent of the act of Congress seems to have been the gathering of rare seed by our consuls in foreign countries as a test of their usefulness by the agriculturists of the various States. Hence the perversion of the intent has become so gross and scandalous that it has overleaped itself and become a huge fiasco and waste of public funds, as well as a great injustice to those who are engaged in legitimate trade.

R. G. TYLER.

[Evening Wisconsin, Friday, March 23, 1906.]

CUT OFF THE FREE SEED WASTE.

The House of Representatives should not reverse the action of its Commitee on Agriculture, which struck from the appropriation bill the traditional provision for the free distribution of seeds. The last appropriation bill carried an allowance of $290,000 for that purpose, an amount of money that is enormous in comparison with any benefits that can possibly be conferred upon the people by the distribution of seeds of the character of those which constitute the free output through the mails.

If the flower and vegetable seeds received by the nonagricultural taxpayer are a fair sample of the seeds which are sent to agriculturists, it is difficult to find any value whatever in the distribution, as they are all flowers of the commonest varieties, and vegetables and grains which are generally grown. There is excuse for a distribution of something absolutely new, as macaroni wheat, for instance, was several years ago; but there is absolutely no reason why the Government should annually provide free seeds for farmers and gardeners who can with a little care gather their supplies from their own premises or purchase new varieties in the village stores.

The free distribution of seeds imposes a burden upon the United States mails, as the packages are all franked by the Congressmen who send them out, and consequently carried without postage. It is estimated that if the Department of Agriculture were required to pay postage at the usual rate on the seeds which are now sent free, the revenues of the Post-Office Department would be increased over $500,000. This would be a considerable item of income for a Department that calls for a large deficiency appropriation from every Congress.

If penny letter postage is desired, it can be achieved only by the establishment of economies through a reduction of the cost of carrying the mails. All illegal mail matter must be weeded out, and all burdens, such as that imposed by the free distribution of seeds, must be removed. There should be a strong popular protest against any attempt on the floor of the House to replace in the appropriation bill the provision for the free distribution of seeds, which has been wisely stricken out by the Committee on Agriculture. Dwellers in the city do not expect seeds from the Government, and the farmers are not asking for them. On the contrary, the National Grange, representing 800,000 farmers, adopted resolutions at its convention in Portland, Oreg., last year, strongly denouncing the appropriation for free seeds as a reckless waste of money, as the policy of free distribution is of no practical value.

On the 1st of April the Postmaster-General proposes to refuse to admit a large amount of matter that is now received as second class and carried at 1 cent a pound which costs the Government 5 cents a pound to carry. With this economic course as to all matter now practically deadheaded, the business and industrial interests may look for penny postage in the near future.

[Orange Judd Farmer, Chicago, March 24, 1906.]

If proper action is taken right now, the free-seed humbug will be killed. It hasn't a leg to stand on, nor has there been a single argument in many years for a continuance of this miserable graft upon the people. Nobody really wants its perpetuity. The Secretary of the Department of Agriculture is utterly opposed to it; the National Grange has thundered against it time and again; various other farmers' organizations have made commendable effort to have it abolished. Finally, the self-respecting farmer has no use for the system. Instead, he very properly resents the cheap effort of his Congressman to curry favor by sending a measly package of the most ordinary kind of seeds, hoping in this way to win a vote. The Government has no more business to furnish free seeds than free overcoats or free horseshoes. Reckoning postage cost at a reasonable sum and the expense of handling, we venture that a million dollars a year is not wide of the mark as the sum Congress has been asking the plain people to pay annually to thus assist in reelection. Now, for the first time in years, a positive step has been taken to throw out free seeds. As recently noted, the House Committee on Agriculture decided not to recommend an appropriation. But "dead sure," some selfish Representative (is he yours, Mr. Farmer) will next week put up a wail in the House asking to have the appropriation reinstated, and probably for an increased amount. Write your Congressman to-day to sustain the House Committee on Agriculture in reforming the fake seed humbug. Unless this is done, some of the politicians who think they can buy the farmers' votes with a few pumpkin seeds will make a great fight to have the House appropriate $300,000 or more for this puprose. It is the privilege and the duty of the farmers, individually, to protest, and do it now.

[The Florists' Exchange, March 24, 1906.]

WHAT THE DAILY PAPERS SAY OF THE FREE-SEED ABUSE.

I've been a loyal citizen for five and forty years,
I've asked no favors and I've kept my taxes from arrears,
Right patiently I've tilled the soil, and when the price was low
I've taken 50 cents for wheat because 'twas ordered so;
I've voted as my conscience urged, and tried to be content
With what few blessings I have had, by Heaven or nature sent,
And is it strange my aching heart with dismal sorrow bleeds
To know they've stopped my one reward—my packages of seeds?

For years and years they've come to me, in little paper sacks,
To reconcile me to my lot of till and toil and tax;
What matter if they sprouted not, or if the corn marked "sweet"
Grew up to mangel-wurzel or became a sugar beet?
Those were but trifles light as air—the seeds gave me to know
The Government at Washington survived through weal and woe;
And 'twas unpatriotic and the most unwise of deeds
To sever all the ties that bind—my packages of seeds.

The radishes were often punk, the onions shorn of scent,
The cabbages were prone to worms, and some fell discontent
Would stunt the spinach as it grew; but every spring I'd sow
My plot at Government expense and watch for them to grow.
They made me feel an integer of governmental life,
And though they brought me days of toil and twilight hours of strife
With cut-worms, cabbage bugs, and new varieties of weeds,
They were a source of pure delight—my packages of seeds.

The rate bill is in statu quo, the tariff bill is dead,
The statehood bill is far from passed, and, far as I have read,
The toil of Congress up to date may be set down as naught;
So when they make the record of the things this session wrought,
To lay before the common folk who stand behind the gun,
The only thing of all they had to do that has been done
To fill the nation's pressing wants and meet the people's needs
Has been to cut off my supplies of governmental seeds.

(J. W. Foley, in New York Times.)

We believe that the committee made a good move when it decided to "economize" by striking this amount of money from the appropriation bill. It would be much better to expend the same in an experimental way, either through the Federal Department of Agriculture or the State experiment stations. (Prairie Farmer, Chicago.)

It is clear from Secretary Wilson's statement that he would not be sorry to see the graft element of the free-seed business reformed altogether. The majority of the committee voted right on the question, and the House should indorse its position. Useful and scientific experiments should be encouraged by the Government, but "not a cent for tribute" to Congressmen should be appropriated. They might as well ask money for free hay or free barbed wire or free brooms. (Chicago Record-Herald.)

This business is little less than political graft. Packages of seed save the recipients a few cents, but where one package does good service a score are thrown away. The business is a joke from one end of the country to the other, and yet one will hear Members of Congress seriously defend the practice when the item appropriating a couple of hundred thousand dollars for the work is under discussion in either House. Secretary Morton tried to stop it, and Congress rebuked him by increasing the appropriation. (Baltimore Herald.)

The appropriation last year was $290,000, but that sum does not represent the cost. When clerical hire, cost of packeting seeds, paper stock, printing, postage, etc., are added the cost to the country is fully $1,000,000. At the regular rate for postage on the 50,000,000 packets distributed last year a private citizen would have to pay approximately $500,000. The postal service is burdened by this huge bulk, which increases the deficit in the Post-Office Department without a commensurate advantage to the public. (Jersey City Journal.)

Competition by the Government in the seed business with individual seedsmen undoubtedly is unfair. The man who invests his capital and buys or produces seeds for sale naturally finds himself hindered and his trade diminished by $250,000 worth of seeds sent out by the United States free of cost to the purchaser. And really, with the present cheapness of things, the abundance of information in official and private publications and the wonderful facilities for distribution by the mails, there is no reason why the Government should continue its time-honored practice. (Richmond (Va.) Leader.)

The principle of the thing is most vicious. It's an outrageous abuse of a practice that had its origin in a worthy spirit of scientific research directed to the improvements of crops. Besides, the seeds are no good. Of the last batch sent us by our Congressman only about half came up. Uncle Sam has to buy in the open market the seeds he gives away and the seedsmen work off onto the amiable old gentleman their last year's stuff.

Should a misguided Senate see fit to insist on the restoration of the seed appropriation—mind, we say if it should—the doctrine of the square deal demands that the Government be given the benefit of just a little larger differential in seeds that will sprout. (Springfield (Mo.) Leader.)

The work of the Department has grown enormously since that bill was passed in 1862, and it is now a part of the public school system. It is doing a splendid service in educating the farmers directly and in helping them to solve their problems. In the prosecution of this work it might be well enough for the Department to distribute among farmers a few specimens of rare seeds that can not be procured in this country. But to pay out more than $200,000 a year for the distribution through Congressmen of seeds which the farmer can produce on his own premises, or purchase at the nearest store, is an abuse on the face of it. On the same principle, the Government could with equal propriety give the farmers agricultural implements and fertilizers. (Richmond (Va.) Dispatch.)

Last year $290,000 was appropriated by Congress for this seed distribution, of which $245,374 was expended for corn, peas, beans, carrots, turnips, grass, cotton, tobacco, and flower seeds. It is stated, however, that only $90,979 was paid for seeds and plants and $41,924 for putting them in packages and marking them. The remainder, more than $100,000, is reported to have been paid out for salaries, traveling expenses, and "miscellaneous expenses." Undoubtedly some of the Congressmen that sent out the seeds to their constitutents also got soft jobs for some of their constituents.

It is also charged that beet-sugar factories received beet seed in 100-pound lots. Of course, that is "graft" pure and simple and nothing else. These seeds are sent free through the mails, and the number of packages carried last year was 35,977,135. This was certainly a substantial contribution to the annual post-office deficit. (Niagara Falls (N. Y.) Gazette.)

Whatever be the actuating motives of different Members, it looks as though the so-called "free-seed graft" is doomed. That is the temper of the majority of the House Agricultural Committee. Uncle JOE CANNON has given out that it is time to stop this leak in the resources of the Government. Of course, there will be indignant protest from that vigorous contingent who will say that it is a pretty pass when the Government is throwing away untold millions upon the Philippines and the isthmian canal and the military establishment that it can not give away a few seed to the oppressed farmer. Be all this as it may, Chairman TAWNEY, of the Appropriations Committee, has been busy getting information on the subject, which he intends to present to the House should there be an effort to defeat the committee when it cuts out free seed. (Knoxville (Tenn.) Sentinel.)

The failure of congress to make a propriashun for the free distribushun of ghardin an' other truck seed is a howlin' calamity, an' if Mounts Butler had anything to do with it Cord Hull an' Jim Miller will beat him three sivil deestricts an' a bend in Big Scouty.

If they do away with the free distribushun of seed, how do the congressmen expect to git back to Washinton?

Echo answers "damfino."

We mind the time when Benton McMillin was fust nomernated for congress, at a convention held at Hartsville. Col. Hut Nash, in making the nomernating speech, closed by sayin': "Mr. Cheermun, McMillin is a good hand-shaker, an' he can scatter gharden seed as well as any of them." Col. Nash was no false profit. Benton sent the women folks gharden seed, the gals flower seed, and the men agricultural reports. He remained in congress 20 year, an' his name to this day is a house hold word in every gharden in the fourth deestrict. (Hag-Camp Grape Vine.)

The true way to distribute seeds by the Government is to send them out with scientific knowledge and purpose; this can only be done by experts. Fortunately, we have a governmental activity which can do this work in the most effective manner. It has rendered incalculable service to the farmers of the country by supplying them with choice seeds that have immensely increased the value of their crops. The increased yield per acre of wheat is directly due to the efforts of the United States Department of Agriculture in this behalf.

And now, if the Congressmen will divest themselves of the seed-distributing function, they will find ready to their hand an agency that can do this far more effectively and advantageously than they can do it themselves. And it will cost less, too; for the Department would not buy such tons and tons of common, ordinary seed, but would aim to get something that would be choicer, better, and that would improve on the crop to be raised. The Congressmen could not possibly do better than to give up their seed slinging, and let the work of improving the crops of the country by distributing improved seed be done by the United States Department of Agriculture. (Salt Lake City Tribune.)

It costs the United States nearly three times as much to distribute seeds, bulbs, and trees to farmers and planters as it costs to purchase the commodities.

Figures in the report of B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, for 1905, show that the Government paid $245,000 for the handling of $90,000 worth of seeds. The items of salaries, traveling expenses, assembling and mailing, and miscellaneous amount to $2.70 for every $1 in actual value.

Congress has been asked to remedy this condition, which is regarded as a travesty on good management by the agricultural journals and societies in various parts of the country.

In 1905 there were miscellaneous authorizations amounting to $4,359; traveling expenses, $7,034; salaries in Washington, $62,471; salaries outside, $8,608; contract for assembling and mailing, $41,926, and various other costs of handling, bringing the total nearly to $90,000 of the $340,000 appropriation.

It has not been explained to the satisfaction of searching inquirers why so much traveling and miscellaneous expenses are needed, and why the salary bill could not be cut down, and for this reason there is strong antipathy to the annual appropriation. But Congress, they say, has a tender spot in its heart for the seed-distribution industry, and has held aloof.

At the end of last year's distribution there were about 50,000 packets of seed on hand, in addition to which the Department had in stock 168,691 pounds of various seeds. The Government does not carry seed over from one year to another, as it has been found best always to distribute fresh seed. The disposition, therefore, of the enormous quantity of left-over seed is an item that is proving a study. Considerable of the salary funds are paid in getting rid of the surplus of the $90,000 worth of seed, for which the Government annually appropriates $340,000, it is said.

Professor Galloway recently testified before the House Committee on Agriculture, furnishing this information. The committee's position was defined by the chairman in these words:

"We are heartily in accord with the efforts of the Department to introduce new or rare plants, grains, fruits, or vegetables, and for that purpose have recommended an appropriation of $40,000, which is all they can comfortably expend in this work. But when it comes to peas and beans and corn and turnips, we feel the country is sufficiently well informed to go it alone, without expending a quarter of a million dollars for this purpose." (Washington (D. C.) Post,)

THE GOVERNMENT SEED SHOP.

EDITOR FLORISTS' EXCHANGE:

If the reader will send to Washington and obtain a copy of the 300-page pamphlet covering the hearings of employees of the Department of Agriculture by the Congressional Agricultural Committee, under date of 12th January, 1906, and subsequently, he will find much interesting, though the writer will not say instructive, information.

On pages 229 to 241 occur some stenographic notes of the testimony of Professor Galloway, of the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture, part of which is as follows:

Professor GALLOWAY. I do not see how anyone who took the ordinary precautions with the seed we send out could help from getting good results. We send out seeds that must necessarily be better than ordinary seed which seedsmen can secure.

Mr. SCOTT. Why?

Mr. GALLOWAY. For the reason that we buy our seed in this way: In the first place, a considerable portion of the seed is grown for us out of what we call our own stock seed. We know the full history of the stock. We get, for example, a pound of lettuce seed of high quality and it is true to name. We can take that pound of lettuce seed and turn it over to a reliable man in California and get 100 pounds that is absolutely true to name, and in order to make it true we send men to the fields where that lettuce seed is growing and have them rogue the field—that is, to eliminate all the lettuce before the seed has gotten any undesirable qualities."

Mr. SCOTT. Is it possible to acquire bids, or in any way introduce the element of competition?

Mr. GALLOWAY. Yes; we do that as far as we possibly can. For instance, we want 40,000 pounds of lettuce of a certain variety, and we know pretty well the men who can furnish that seed at different places on the Pacific coast. We send each of these men a blank form and ask them to submit a proposal for that seed. They come in at a certain time, and, unless there is a special reason, we give it to the man whose figure is the lowest.

Mr. FIELD. The common impression is that some dealers destroy all the old stock. Is that true?

Mr. GALLOWAY. I can not speak for any particular firm, but it is a general practice to blend seed. It is not only the general practice to blend seed, but there are all sorts of apparatus and devices that have for their object the rejuvenation of old seed, polishing devices that will make old seed look bright; there are certain devices to rub the dust off; there are certain cases where, if they do not want the seed to grow very well (where we get imported seed), they run them over hot plates to destroy some of their vitality. It is an object sometimes to have the seed, especially high-grade seed, low in vitality, the main object being to keep up the price.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Department seeds ought to be the very best seeds that are sent out.

Mr. GALLOWAY. Under the old practice, before the Department got its own seed, it was the custom to run in poor seed. We could not avoid it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do you reject within certain percentages or do you reject them absolutely if they do not come up to the standard of vitality?

Mr. GALLOWAY. We can not fix any definite standard for any particular year. One year we had a peculiar case in California where the hot wind came on when these seeds were being harvested and so thickened the skin that the seeds would not germinate at all unless they were soaked. When they came in we could not germinate them, and we rejected the whole lot, and then we found that if they were cut or soaked they would germinate all right; but we had to add some special directions to our packets calling attention to this fact.

Mr. CHANDLER. What course do you pursue in order to prevent the getting of poor seeds?

Mr. GALLOWAY. By taking things forehanded we can make provisions all along the line. We have right now enough seed for next year's distribution.

Mr. CHANDLER. You spoke a moment ago of an expert you have in lettuce growing.

Mr. GALLOWAY. Yes; we have men now who are as expert as any in the seed business. It is a common business now.

SEEDS AND THE "HAYSEEDS"—SUGGESTION FOR THE SOLUTION OF THE GARDEN-SEED ABUSE.

The statement emanating from the Department of Agriculture relative to the free distribution of seeds by Members of Congress to their constituents is not devoid of humor. In a general way it has been known to the world since Secretary Sterling Morton waged his famous and delightful warfare on the humbug that a good deal of unnecessary money was squandered on free seeds under an act of Congress whose intent had been strangely perverted in practice. The extent of the waste is now made clear in a striking way.

The act of Congress which is responsible for this seed distribution was intended to provide for a wide distribution among a large number of experimenters of "new and valuable seeds" in order that two blades of grass might be made to grow where only one grew before, and new foods, grasses, and vegetables might be introduced into our domestic and agricultural economy. This has long ago been lost sight of, and now the staid and respectable Members of Congress cling with grim determination to the privilege of sending to their constituents a number of practically worthless packets of cabbage, turnip, heliotrope, sage, gumbo, and onion seeds which may be bought at any country grocery.

The actual cost of the 40,000,000 packets which are done up into packages, giving several varieties to the 7,300,000 recipients, is about $90,000. This is indefensible enough, but though Members of Congress will admit individually that it is nonsense to send the seed around the country they stand pretty firmly for the perquisite when the abolishment of the practice comes to a vote. But the humor of the situation appears—and the joke is on Uncle Sam and his Treasury—when it is shown that the actual cost to that Treasury of $90,000 worth of seeds is nearly $250,000. To the cost of the seeds and plants must be added the freight. The cost of doing the seeds into packets for distribution is $36,000; the salaries paid for "expert explorers," gardeners, messengers, and multifarious hangers-on in the seed game amount each year to $46,000; the miscellaneous and operating expenses and office rent account call for $14,000, and the extraordinary and inexplicable item of "additional miscellaneous" is $10,000.

In short, this is as fine an example of the waste in the Government handling of a business matter as could be found in the annals of civilized nations. More than 75 per cent of the total cost of the seed largess to Congressmen is "eaten up" by the cost of getting the seeds to the "hayseeds" whose votes are thought to be powerfully influenced by the "little vote getters," as they are called.

In the interest of economy a suggestion is in order. It is positively useless to urge Congress to relinquish the perquisite, but why not allot in money to each Congressman his pro rata share of $90,000, the actual cost of the seeds? The Congressmen could send the cash by check to his constituents, who would please the merchants of their neighborhood by buying the common garden seeds in the local groceries. The country's seed dealers would not be offended by Government rivalry, Uncle Sam would save $182,268 a year in actual cash, and the "hayseed" vote affected by the seeds would be safe.

[Norfolk Dispatch, Thursday, April 5, 1906.]

NO USE OF FREE SEED.

Although we have never taken the agitation against the free distribution of seeds by the Government very seriously, we are inclined to think that Congress has been wise in cutting off its appropriation for this gift to the farmers. The annual distribution of some million packages of seeds by Congressmen forms a species of paternalism that is not demanded by the farmers of the country. We have no seedsmen's trust. On the contrary, the men who engage in this line of business should be encouraged in every way possible. They should have big profits for their products, because it is highly important that their seed should come up to the very best standard, and that they should have money enough to warrant their making experiments and doing everything in their power to obtain the best seed.

We believe in liberal appropriations for the Agricultural Department; in fact, we hope to see this Department one day receive more money from the Government than either the War or Navy Departments, as the foundation of our natural property lies in the farms, and, in our opinion, it is not possible for the Government to do too much for the farmers. But the seed that the Government has given away is simply bought without regard to its variety or its adaptability to the various classes of soil. It is handed out indiscriminately to the farmers in order that they may be reminded that the Representative at Washington is looking after their interests.

We have heard farmers remark on receipt of these seed that this free gift of a package of seed was all that their Congressmen did for them in Washington, and then when the seed failed to come up we have heard the farmers abuse the Congressmen who did them the unkind turn in giving them the seed.

It may be true, as claimed, that the Government is paying the railroads some ten or fifteen millions of dollars more each year than it should pay them for carrying the mails, and that may be the reason that the post-office has an annual deficit, but it is also true that the free distribution of seeds is partly the cause for this deficit. If the Government charged regular rates for carrying these seeds, its income would be increased a half million dollars a year. Here, then, is one direction in which it can retrench a bit. The Post-Office Department should be conducted with a view to the eventual establishment of a penny rate for postage stamps and a parcels post. To this end every economy should be practiced.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, my scholarly and popular colleague, Mr. RAINEY, on the 5th and 6th of this month, made a speech in the Committee of the Whole that invited passing comment, aroused some curiosity, and excited not a little surprise. From this speech it appears that several weeks ago my colleague went to New York. What a world of meaning, Mr. Chairman, what a wealth of experience is expressed in these three words—"went to New York!" What a panorama they bring up before us of those who came from foreign shores and caught the first glimpses of the clustered homes of their adopted country from the waters of that majestic harbor, where the tides of the Hudson and the ocean meet; of the hundreds and thousands who came from the villages and farms to recruit the ranks of the workers in that throbbing center of life, whose genius and enterprise have made New York preeminent in commerce, in trade, in finance, in literature, in science, in art, in religion, in charity, in philanthropy, in all those splendid achievements that have made New York the imperial city of the Empire State, the pride and glory of America, and the marvel of the world! [Applause.] As the scenes unfold before us, what tragedies we witness, and what melodramas, what comedies, and what farces! We read the entertaining accounts of these comedies in the daily papers, and once in a while, but very seldom, one of these accounts creeps within the dignified but somnolent pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. [Laughter.] How many thousands, Mr. Chairman, before my adventurous colleague essayed this perilous journey, have gone to New York and throughout the remainder of their lives have wished that they had stayed at home. [Laughter.] "Went to New York!" Some of those who went hunted the tiger in his favorite haunts. They returned from the jungles to their native tall grass bearing with them the indelible marks of the claws and teeth of that monster upon their person as perpetual memorials that they, too, went to New York. [Laughter.]

Others who went to New York have lingered in those delightful pastures and lanes that surround Wall street, where the bulls browse upon the greenbacks of kids, and where the bears feast all the year round upon spring lambs [laughter]; and after they have been tossed to and fro between the horns of bulls and the jaws of bears, they have carried away to their native towns a deep-seated aversion to all cattle shows and menageries to remind them that they, too, went to New York. [Laughter.] Others yet again who went to New York have been attracted by the brilliantly illuminated and popular boulevards and avenues, and they stop to parley with the benevolent vender of golden bricks, the benign distributer of emerald goods, and the deft manipulator of iridescent shells [laughter], and then exchange their surplus capital for experience, both lasting and profitable, which dwells with them to remind them that they, too, went to New York. And yet another, as he strolls up the Bowery, which one old historian calls "that fair country road," falls in with the dear old friend of his father away back in old Schoharie County in the good old days, and with this genial friend of the family he participates in a few of those friendly games that they used to play at the old homestead, and later visits various homes of joyousness and mirth. The next morning he awakes in an unfamiliar hallway to find, to his surprise that he has loaned to the dear old friend of his father his money, his watch, and all of his personal belongings, including his hat and coat. [Laughter.] He arises, when he is able; borrows money, if he is able, and repairs to 180 Broadway to provide himself with a watch to regulate his conduct and tell him when it is time to go home. [Applause and laughter.] Having returned to his native hills, he enthralls gaping audiences with the thrilling account of how he was sandbagged at half past 9 in the evening in front of the Brick Presbyterian Church as he was returning from a Stoddard lecture. [Prolonged applause and laughter.] And the frequent repetition of this tale during the shady afternoon and evening of his life serves to remind him that he, too, went to New York.

Many of those, Mr. Chairman, who have gone to New York have met with the same experience as the man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho. Others, on the contrary, have felt that they were more fortunate, because they fell among liars; but we have it on excellent modern authority that the liar is as bad as a thief.

Now, of all the droll and entertaining comedies that have been enacted by all those who ever went to New York, the drollest is as somber as an old morality play compared with the enlivening farce in which my sedate colleague played a conspicuous, if unconscious and unwilling, part. For when my colleague went to New York he fell in with Keene—Keene, of Broadway—of lower Broadway—the lower the better for Keene. My colleague met Keene, and Keene took him in. Such delightfully taking ways has Keene, of Broadway! Such a hospitable gentleman! He is simply bubbling over with exuberant solicitude for the welfare of his fellow-man. Keene, of Broadway, is a dealer in diamonds and precious stones, but the brilliant gleam of his diamonds is as dark as the gloom of primeval chaos compared to the hospitable glitter in the eyes of Keene, of Broadway, as he welcomes the coming guest across his hospitable threshold. [Laughter and applause.] He is simply overflowing with this desire to benefit his fellow-man, and that perceptible wink in the other eye as Keene, of Broadway, speeds the parting guest, who has just paid him 191½ per cent on a watch reimported from across the water from New Jersey [laughter] is not in reality a wink. Far be it from me, Mr. Chairman, to intimate that Keene, of Broadway, would ever wink at one of his guests, or even at himself, notwithstanding the almost irresistible temptation, when he awakes in the silent watches of the night and meditates upon his function in the economy of the universe in general, and in the activities of lower Broadway in particular.

No; that apparent wink, if the truth must be told, is the normal droop in the eye of Keene, of Broadway. It is caused by his long and continuous sorrowing over the enormities of our fiscal system and his prolonged weeping over the afflictions of his fellow-men who are unable to get any kind of a watch for less than $1, or a trusty timepiece for less than $2.50. [Applause and laughter.] But he is such a delightful, kind, and hospitable gentleman, and his philanthropy is all embracing! The motive, the consuming passion in the life of Keene is to take in all his fellow-men and do them good. [Applause and laughter.] But I must not forget that Keene's philanthropy is of the practical nature. Now, we all know that a practical philanthropist must be an acute financier, and Keene, of Broadway, is all of that. There is nothing dull about Keene. He lives up to his name. The most ancient and battle-scarred veteran of the stock exchange could take valuable lessons from Keene, of Broadway. The man upon whom the Grand International Amalgamated Fraternity of Shell Workers has conferred the imperial and omnipotent degree is a clumsy, bungling neophite by the side of Keene, of Broadway. [Laughter and applause.] He not only lives up to his name; he is proud of it. He seeks to give it an international reputation, for I see by his letterheads that his cable address is "Keenness," and I think we will all admit after hearing or reading my colleague's speech that for keenness, Keene, of Broadway—of lower Broadway—is a veritable stem-winder. [Applause and laughter.]

As the possessor of these attractive qualities, these taking traits, my colleague confidently, nay, even proudly, asserts that Keene, of Broadway, is a typical Democrat. Coming as this statement does from my colleague, I must of course concede that Keene is a Democrat, but, Mr. Chairman, that he is a typical Democrat I refuse to admit. I have known a great many able and famous men in that historic party. There are some of them on the other side of the House to-day. There before me sits my good friend the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS, whose favorite theme is "intellectual integrity," and I know that every man on this side of the House will bear witness that in his political career and in his professional activities he has been as true to that ideal as was the chivalrous knight of old to the motto of his shield. [Applause.] In his political life and in his professional services he scorns all forms of lying, deceit, chicanery, and pettifogging, and Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, is a typical Democrat. Not far off sits the dauntless Democrat from New York, Mr. SULZER, but notwithstanding his resemblance to a great Whig he is a downright Democrat of the Jackson type. [Applause.] Honesty speaks from every lineament of his face; honesty is eloquent in every gesture and movement of his body; honesty is in every tone of his voice. The gentleman from New York, as you all know, is a vigorous hater of all forms of cant, hypocrisy, and fraud. The gentleman from New York City is a typical Democrat. Between the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from New York and Keene, of Broadway—of lower Broadway—there is not one single point of resemblance. No, Mr. Chairman, I am wrong about that. There is one point of likeness and that is their magnitude. The gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from New York are great men; they are great Democrats. Keene, of Broadway—of lower Broadway—is a great humbug. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, through his active philanthrophy and through his astute financiering Keene, of Broadway, has become a rich man. If we may believe my distinguished colleague, whom I am glad to welcome on the floor of the House, Keene, of Broadway, must be a very rich man. Has not my colleague shown us a photograph of his shop on lower Broadway? Now, we all know that whatever else may be low on lower Broadway there is nothing low about real estate in that locality, and a man who occupies premises there must be a very rich man. Then, again, my colleague has produced some advertisements which Keene, of Broadway, has inserted in the great metropolitan dailies, and anyone who has had any experience in these matters knows that when you insert full-page and half-page advertisements in these great journals you must be a very rich man. Then my colleague brought up here American or some other express company's receipts for fabulous sums of money shipped abroad by Keene, of Broadway, for purposes not fully disclosed. So, I say, our distinguished philanthropist and financier must be a very rich man. For some months past he has evidently been laying up something for a rainy day. [Laughter and applause.] And when the day came Keene, of Broadway, of lower Broadway, was prepared to meet not only the day but the rain he expected. [Laughter.] The method as disclosed in my colleague's address, by which Keene, of Broadway, of lower Broadway, has accumulated his fortune, reminds me very much of the method adopted by a notorious financier who recently made the acquaintance of the inspectors of the Post-Office Department and is now being fed and clothed in a very becoming costume at the expense of the United States Government. This altruistic philanthropist inserted an advertisement in the public press to this effect, "How to get rich quick without work."

"On receipt of $1 I will send, postage paid, to any address, full directions how to get rich quick without work." The dollar bills sped to the office of this distinguished financier, and the senders of those bills each received in return a card plainly printed and bearing this legend: "To get rich quick without work, fish for suckers, as I do." [Laughter.] Keene, of Broadway, of lower Broadway, has shown himself a most accomplished angler. From the time of dear old Izaak Walton none of the followers of this gentle sportsman have achieved such success. The stream that he whips is the stream that flows through Broadway, and his catches are numerous and large, and now and again he draws in some very distinguished person.

You can realize, Mr. Chairman, how greatly distressed I should be to find that Keene, of Broadway, had ever caught anybody from the great State of Illinois [laughter], for more reasons than one, Mr. Chairman, but especially because it would apparently give some plausibility to the popular perversion of the nickname of the people of my State. [Laughter.] And here, Mr. Chairman, I must digress for one moment to explain the true name and the origin of the people of Illinois.

Some historians have asserted that the name had its origin in a taunt that was thrown out to some Illinois people by a Missourian. Early in this century men from both States used to go up in the summer to the lead mines in Galena to work, and they would return in the autumn; and this historian asserts that on one occasion a Missouri wag, seeing a party of men from my State going down the Mississippi, called out to them in derision: "You Illinois fellows are genuine suckers; you come up the river in the spring, and you go down in the fall."

Now, this was a very unkind taunt from the Missourian to his fellow-workers from Illinois, especially when we think of the retort that they might have made if they had wanted to. But be this as it may, this account shows that this event is not the true origin of our popular sobriquet, because, as you will notice, the Missourian is supposed to have said: "You fellows are genuine suckers," showing that the name was in use prior to that time.

Another distinguished antiquary has insisted that the name for the people of my State originated in an expression of Col. George Rogers Clark, on that eventful summer night when he captured Kaskaskia. It is claimed that he called to the British commandant and his officers, who were drinking mint juleps through straws: "Surrender, you suckers." [Laughter.] But a little historical research and a little logical analysis will show that this account of the origin is entirely incorrect, for the reason that when George Rogers Clark called upon the British commandant to surrender it was at midnight, and the only use that he was making of straws was the straw in the bed that he was lying on. And then there is this further fact to be considered, that in those early days those western frontiersmen would not permit straws or any other such impediment to interfere with the natural and unrestrained and rapid flow of their spirits. [Laughter.] So we must dismiss this account as altogether apochryphal.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the real origin of the word. We all know that the word "succor," in the sense of aid and assistance, is in common use to-day. We also know that the verb to "succor" is in general use. The noun "succor," meaning a person as a deliverer, although not now in common use, has been enshrined in our choicest literature. You all remember that in Shakespeare's play of Henry VI, Sir William Lucy appeals to the Duke of York in these words:

> Oh, send some succour to the distress'd lord.

And later on the same character enjoins Somerset:

> Let not your private discords keep away
> The levied succours that should lend him aid.

And in the second part of the same play the Irish messenger calls out:

> Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime.

And again, in Fletcher's Double Marriage, one of the characters says:

> You have lost two noble succours.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the kind of succors the people of Illinois are, and this is the way they got their name. In 1780, when George Rogers Clark and his men held Illinois, the British sent a party of English soldiers and savage Indians to take St. Louis, then a Spanish village and an ally of the American revolutionists. The distressed people in St. Louis sent at once to Clark for aid, and by forced marches he hurried to the defense of the little fortress. As the wild Indians appeared shrieking and howling on the northeast, the eager watchers from the ramparts descried the officers and men of Clark's command, and in their enthusiasm they shouted to the people below: "Here come the succors from Illinois [laughter]; thank God, the town is saved!" Now, that is the real origin of our name. I have said that the word "succor," meaning aid, was in common use. A few days ago I saw on the editorial page of one of the Chicago papers, referring to the generous outpouring of assistance from all parts of the world to the people on our western coast, this heading: "Succor for the suffering;" and in a later issue of one of the Chicago papers I found this heading: "Army officer's good judgment and zeal win admiration of people he is succoring." And I wish, Mr. Chairman, that from this hour on we could recall the use of this good old word as applied to a person, and stop the perversion of the sense and spelling as applied to the people of my good State. As we contemplate the sad condition of our fellow-countrymen in the Far West, I can not help thinking that San Francisco, sorrowing in the midst of the ruins of her former greatness, beautiful San Francisco, stricken, but not dismayed, as she watches with reviving hope order rising out of chaos under the guard of the boys in blue of our Regular Army, might well exclaim, "Thank God, our succors are here!"

And Funston, whose sleepless vigils by the Golden Gate have warded off crimes and disasters worse than the calamities of earthquakes and of fire, who has inspired the despairing with hope, who has strengthened the fainting with courage, who has given new significance to the old truth that "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war," brave, dauntless, glorious little Funston has proven himself the noblest succor of them all. [Applause.] So, as I say, it would be a happy day for the people of Illinois if we could return to the old, legitimate use of this word and put an end forever to its perverted form and meaning.

But I must now return to my colleague [Mr. RAINEY] and his speech. A reference to this speech shows that it consists of five parts: First, a photograph that was produced of the shop of Keene, of Broadway; second, an advertisement of this distinguished philanthropist; third, a contribution of former Congressman Baker to a periodical; fourth, certain positive statements of fact, uncorroborated and without reference, and, fifth, certain assumptions by way of conclusions. Now, then, if my colleague's statement of facts be true, it might be interesting to see what conclusions could be legitimately drawn therefrom. So let me assume, for the purposes of argument, what I shall afterward attempt to disprove, that his statements were correct. What are his conclusions? They may be divided into two parts. First, there are his soulful conclusions, as we might term them. These soulful conclusions related to the Democratic organization. This, of course, must be a very distressing subject for some of us, and I must confess that I approach it with a degree of solicitude.

This first conclusion is that the Democratic party has no leaders. Now, of course, I must accept this, coming from such high authority, but simply as a test of the value of the rest of his reasoning I was interested to see if possible by what process of ratiocination my colleague arrived at this conclusion that the Democratic party had no leader. I take it that his mental process was something like this: Leadership assumes the idea of motion. More correctly I think it assumes the idea of progress from a certain terminus, a quo, as the lawyers would call it, to another terminus ad quem, and that as the Democratic party had been standing, as he said in his peroration, like an old soldier for two thousand years, with dust in his eyes [laughter], with no idea of progress, it would be quite correct to speak of it as having no leaders.

Now, with all modesty, not being intimately acquainted with that organization, I had no idea that the Democratic party had been standing still so long. I thought that I at times had discerned some motion, but it appeared to be rather a retrograde motion toward the original terminus a quo. But whichever way it was, I must concede, on my colleague's assertion, of course, that the Democratic party has no leaders.

The second soulful conclusion was that the Democratic party needs no leaders. This, again, I must concede, on this theory, however he may have arrived at his conclusion, that any organization that is on the eve of disbanding has no need of leaders. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

His second conclusion, what might be called his "soundful conclusions" [laughter], are more difficult of comprehension. From this picture and this advertisement and the letter of our old friend, Mr. Baker, and from his own statement of facts, my colleague concludes that the present revenue laws of the United States should be revised. But there is no word from one end of his speech to the other that shows which way he thinks the tariff ought to be revised—whether up or down. As I listened to his remarks I thought he was making an argument for the repeal of that section of the present tariff law which admits free of duty American goods that had been exported. But whatever these soundful conclusions may have been, if his statement of facts was incorrect, you will all agree with me that with the disappearance of the foundation the superstructure must also vanish. I am very confident that my friend from Mississippi, with his "intellectual integrity," will be the first to admit that, as far as conclusions are drawn from misstatements of facts, they ought not to be considered in this body, particularly in a serious consideration of revenue legislation.

I wish now, Mr. Chairman, to address myself to that part of my colleague's remarks that refers to the Waltham Watch Company, of Massachusetts, and to the Elgin Watch Company, of Illinois. My colleague told us that he had been studying the watch business for some time in preparation for teaching a kindergarten. I am sure we all appreciate the modesty implied in that statement that his preparation had only gone that far. But we all know that the benefit of study depends partly on the student and partly on the tutor. I am reminded of a banker here in this city who was very much exercised as to the way in which his son, a young college graduate, was spending his time. So he asked him one evening: "My son, what are you doing these days?" His son said: "Why, father, I am studying bookkeeping." His father said: "I am very glad to hear that. Who is teaching you?" "Why," he said, "a good old friend of mine out at Bennings." [Laughter.] "Well," said the father, "I know from experience that that sort of teaching may be entertaining, but it is neither enlightening nor profitable." So if one were to go and study the watch business, I think there might be other more valuable sources of information than Keene, of Broadway—lower Broadway.

So, Mr. Chairman, I must explain what little I know about this watch business, how I know it, and why I take an interest in speaking about it.

I must say, in the first place, that my principal interest is simply that of pure truth. No matter what the artist of the comic papers may say, no matter what humorous paragraphers may hint, the word of a Member of this House, seriously stated, is taken for truth throughout the country, and I think that in our discussions here, when we come down to the actual argument which influences men in and out of this House, we should be governed solely by a regard for truth. As there is no proper way of cross-examination here except such as may be embarrassing to the Member addressing the committee, who otherwise would make a valuable contribution to our sum of intelligence, we ought, so far as we can, voluntarily to observe the laws of evidence. So, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will tell you frankly how I know what little I do in reference to these two companies and why I take an interest in seeing that only the truth is stated in regard to them.

The Waltham Watch Company, of Massachusetts, was born in my native State in the same year in which I was born, in 1856, and was then known as the American Watch Company. During the greater part of the last fifty years, both while I was a child in the vicinity of Waltham, and later on wherever I have been, I have always heard the Waltham factory spoken of as one of the model factories of the world. Soon after my graduation from college, in 1874, with the first money that I saved up, I purchased a Waltham watch of the Mattison jewelry store in Chicago, of which Spaulding & Co. are the present successors. I bought that watch in 1874 and paid for it $55. I have reason to remember very well that price. I would not part with it for one hundred times that amount. That watch, I am now assured by retailers, owing to what I presume my colleague would call the baleful and blighting influence of a Republican revenue system, could now be purchased for from $18 to $22, according to the retail store in which it might be purchased. So I have always had something of a sentimental interest in the Waltham Company, and regret to hear anything said about it that is untrue, particularly if what is untrue is also discreditable. I have here in my hand a very interesting paper called the "Norwalk Experiment," published at Norwalk, Huron County, Ohio, Tuesday, May 27, 1856, the year in which the Waltham Watch Company began turning out watches. On the advertising page there are several advertisements of merchants in this Ohio town who had returned from New York with American watches, which at that time meant only Waltham watches, and on the editorial page is this article:

AMERICAN WATCHES.

For a long time it has been thought that the United States could not manufacture watches as economically or of as good quality as is done in Europe; but the ingenuity of the Yankee has accomplished this desirable end, and they are now made in large quantities fully equal to any that are imported. These watches can be seen at J. A. Wilkinson & Co.'s jewelry store. By the way, this establishment has just been fitted up in elegant style and, with the large stock of goods just opened, looks "as neat as a new pin."

I do not see before me the Member from Ohio who represents the district in which Norwalk is located, but I trust that this store is still selling American watches and is still "as neat as a new pin."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would ask the date of the paper from which he just read?

Mr. BOUTELL. May 27, 1856.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman remember or can he tell the House what the duty on watches was at that time?

Mr. BOUTELL. On watches at that time I think the duty was 10 per cent ad valorem.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am even more interested in seeing that nothing but the truth is stated in reference to the Elgin Watch Company, of my own State. Illinois is proud of beautiful Kane County, lying in the Fox River Valley, and Kane County is proud of three things. She is proud of her farms, she is proud of her Elgin butter, and she is proud of her Elgin watch factory. [Applause.]

Now, a few days ago, after the address of my learned colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], I had the pleasure of receiving a call from an old friend of mine, a gentleman who lives in my ward in Chicago, a man well known for many years in the business world of Chicago for integrity and honor, Mr. Charles H. Hulburd. Mr. Hulburd told me what I did not know, or if I had known I had forgotten, that he was the president of the Elgin Watch Company. He went on to say that he had read the accounts of my colleague's remarks in the newspapers, and was so shocked and surprised at the statements made in the papers that he had secured a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and, although he found that the statements made in the newspapers were not in all cases borne out by the statements as they appeared in the RECORD, still he said he would like to submit to me as his Representative and to the Committee on Ways and Means certain facts in reference to the organization and present condition of the Elgin Watch Company. I assured him that I would be very glad to have him send that material to the committee, and the committee would utilize it whenever there was occasion to offer it to anyone who wished to discuss this question on the floor of the House. I asked him to make a statement in writing and also to be perfectly frank with me and to give me the situation of the employees in the Elgin factory and their views concerning public questions as well as the opinion from the directors' room. He said that he would endeavor to do this, and subsequently sent to me a written statement and also sent here a Mr. Kinna, who he said would give me any further information that I desired. Who, probably you will ask, is Mr. Kinna? Mr. Kinna is a Wisconsin boy who entered the employ of the Elgin Watch Company some years ago at a dollar and a half a day and has worked up to the position he now holds, which is that of representative of this Elgin Watch Company at its New York salesroom. That is the way the Elgin Watch Company has of dealing with its trusted employees.

I asked Mr. Hulburd if he knew anything about the Waltham Watch Company or their people. He said he knew them only as a rival, but that he had a personal acquaintance with the president, Mr. Fitch. I told him that if that company had any material giving information concerning the business of their company our committee would be very glad to have it. Subsequently I received a call from Mr. Fitch, the president of the Waltham Watch Company. You may ask who Mr. Fitch is. Mr. Fitch was a New England boy, who began his work at the bench over forty years ago and has worked his way up through all the grades until he is now the president of this corporation. Mr. Fitch also sent a written statement, and, through the counsel of the company, Mr. Crawford, has given all the information that I am going to furnish to the committee; so that, if I do not say so with every sentence, I want the gentlemen of the committee to understand that what I say in reference to these two companies is simply in the interest of absolute truth, and if I do not always give the qualification you will know that it is on the authority of these gentlemen to whom I have referred.

On page 4911 of the RECORD, in the first column, my colleague states boldly, without any reference or corroboration, that there is a watch trust composed of a certain big four, to which the Elgin Watch Company and the Waltham Watch Company are parties. On this point Mr. Hulburd says:

The Elgin Watch Company is not a party to any watch trust. Neither the company itself or its officers, directly or indirectly, hold any of the stock in any other watch company in the world; nor is its stock held by or for any other watch company.

Right here on the question of the existence of a watch trust and the method that ought to have been resorted to, if my colleague wished to be accurate, I wish to read two letters.

Mr. RAINEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly.

Mr. RAINEY. I did not expect that either the Waltham or the Elgin company would admit it?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yet at the same time my colleague must concede that there are honest men even connected with the Elgin Watch Company and with the Waltham company.

Mr. RAINEY. We thought that when the beef-trust men in Chicago denied that they were in a combination. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELL. The two letters to which I refer as to whether there was a watch trust or a combination among the manufacturers are these. The first one is written by a typical Democrat, whose name you will all recognize. Until the Democratic party had relapsed, according to my authoritative colleague, into an unled aggregation, the gentleman who wrote this letter used to be proudly referred to as the "peerless leader."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended until he concludes his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Illinois may finish his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAMB. How much time will the gentleman need?

Mr. BOUTELL. Without interruption, I should get through in half an hour or forty minutes.

Mr. LAMB. I will yield the gentleman that time.

Mr. BOUTELL. Now, remember, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I read these two letters for two purposes—first, to show by indirection that the former "peerless leader" of the Democratic party did not think that these companies were in any watch trust, and, secondly, to show the more careful method adopted by a really fair-minded man when he is endeavoring to get at the truth. The first letter which I read is signed "W. J. Bryan." It is dated at Lincoln, Nebr., May 6, 1905. The heading upon the paper is "The Commoner, William J. Bryan, editor and proprietor." The letter reads as follows:

WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY,
Waltham, Mass.

GENTLEMEN: Our attention has been called to the statement issued by certain retail jewelers to the effect that you and three or four other watch companies are in a combination to destroy competition by compelling those who sell your goods to refuse to handle the goods of other manufacturers——

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask him to read that part over in regard to the condition which he said he heard they had made—— that you and three or four other watch companies are in a combination to destroy competition by compelling those who sell your goods to refuse to handle the goods of other manufacturers. Please let me know whether in selling you make any such conditions, and also whether there is any agreement by your company and other companies as to prices or rules in regard to sales.

My object in inquiring is to avoid doing you injustice if the complaint made of you is without foundation.

Very truly, yours, W. J. BRYAN.

A very fair, broad-minded inquiry on the part of the proprietor and editor of a paper, who undoubtedly contemplated making some observations in his journal along this line concerning this company. The reply is as follows.

AMERICAN WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY,
Waltham, Mass., May 17, 1905.

Mr. W. J. BRYAN,
Editor The Commoner, Lincoln, Nebr.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of the 6th instant, we beg to say that you have evidently been misinformed, or possibly the "certain retail jewelers," to whom you refer, have been misinformed in regard to the business policy of this company.

We do not sell to retail jewelers at all.

We confine the sale of our product strictly to a few selected wholesale dealers, known to the trade as jobbers.

We know of no combination in the watch business, and this company has never been in a combination of any nature for any purpose whatever.

The "combination" and "trust" talk which is indulged in by some people in the trade is hard to explain, but probably is partly due to competitors who realize that we are one of the largest and most dominant factors in the trade, and possibly due, secondly, to the statements of certain jobbers to whom we have ceased to sell.

During the last five years we have ceased to sell direct to five or six customers, mainly because these jobbers were also retailers and were using their connection with the manufacturing company to buy more cheaply than other retailers.

We do not decline to sell all jobbers who retail if they are fair about it, but our aim is to protect as much as possible both the retailer and jobber in securing a fair profit, and this has been our policy for nearly fifty years.

Yours, truly,

AMERICAN WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY,
E. C. FITCH, President.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman, who has had these interviews with representatives of the Elgin company, if at any time in any of those interviews they ever denied to him what I said about the prices they make abroad for their watches is true?

Mr. BOUTELL. I will say to my colleague I will get to that later on; that they have substantially denied, with such explanation as I think will be satisfactory.

Mr. RAINEY. I saw substantial denial made by the president of the Waltham company in which he admitted it all.

Mr. BOUTELL. The next statement by my colleague and the reply of these companies that I will take up is that relating to their capital stock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman from Illinois to be not only a truth-seeking man but a good lawyer, and with that in my mind I want to ask him this question: Which would the gentleman regard as the better evidence, the letter which he has just read, or the actual contract produced, showing that conditions were made with the purchasers of those watches in a contract really signed by both parties?

Mr. BOUTELL. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that that matter of contracts I will explain in a few moments, and that these contracts have no bearing whatever upon the combination which Mr. Bryan says that he had heard of.

I thank the gentleman for having interrupted me, because he reminds me of something that had slipped from my mind. The Commoner is a paper that I like to look at frequently, and it is kept on file in the Library of Congress. I have had the files of that paper carefully examined since the date of Mr. Bryan's letter to this watch company, and the receipt of the answer from the president, and I will say that such examination does not disclose any editorial reference to those companies from that time to the present. I find further, that since the speech of my distinguished colleague, of which the Commoner printed some two columns in the issue of the 20th, and in reference to which a letter from Washington was printed on the 13th; this paper has made no mention editorially of the matter, and Mr. Bryan is a typical Democrat.

Now, in regard to the stock. One newspaper account of the speech of my colleague referred to the stock of the Elgin Watch Company as $10,000,000. My colleague, in the RECORD, does not give the amount of capital stock, but he makes several references to the purchasers of these watches being forced to help pay dividends on watered stock. Now, what are the facts, and these could readily have been obtained by writing to the company or by examining the records in Illinois? The Elgin Watch Company is not capitalized for $10,000,000. The capital stock is $5,000,000. The watches in process of manufacture, the buildings, the machinery, and the land are appraised at $6,000,000. No account whatever is taken of good will, trade-marks, and patent rights; and the dividend on this stock at the present time is only 8 per cent, although there were years from 1893 to 1898 when they were compelled frequently to pass their dividends—very significant years in the history of the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

What are the facts in relation to the Waltham Company, as to which my colleague asserts that the purchasers of the watches have been helping to pay dividends on watered stock. After fifty years of honorable effort the stock of the Waltham Company is $4,000,000; and yet they report that the surplus and accumulations have been invested in tangible assets worth $7,000,000, and that their intangible assets and trade-marks, patent rights, copyrights, and good will are worth $4,000,000 more; and it is paying only 10 per cent on $4,000,000 capital stock, which has sold as high as 285. So it appears that the Waltham Company, instead of paying on any watered stock, has a stock the market value of which has nearly 200 per cent pure cream. This is the result, as I say, of fifty years of work and endeavor of those who have invested their savings in this company. Certainly nothing to alarm even one of the most "craving credulity." What individual who had worked and labored for fifty years would have been satisfied with such a moderate showing in the increase of his capital and surplus?

But I must hurry on. On page 4911, in the first column, my colleague referred to the form of contract used by the Elgin National Watch Company in connection with certain of its movements and a somewhat similar contract used by the Waltham Company; and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to this point. My colleague has given the text of these contracts correctly, but has entirely failed to grasp the idea of their origin, the extent to which they are used, or the necessity for their use. Apparently no inquiry was made about it by him. These contracts of the two companies are conditions of sale and are far from identical. The Elgin contract is based upon patent rights; the Waltham contract upon trade-marks and secret processes. They differ widely in their language and were prepared separately, without any agreement, and there was a considerable interval of time in their appearance, the Elgin contract being first in the field.

Now, what are these contracts, and to what do they apply, which my colleague [Mr. RAINEY] says have been in restraint of the retail dealers? The contract in these cases relate solely to what is known as "railroad movements," being watch movements sold chiefly to railroad employees. These constitute not to exceed 4 per cent of the total output of the Elgin factory and about the same proportion of the output of the Waltham Company. As to all the remaining output of each company, there are no contracts whatsoever establishing any standard retail price.

What is the reason for these contracts? They are asked for, sought for, and insisted upon by the retail dealers. This system of contracts was adopted first by the Elgin and later by the Waltham Company, at the urgent insistence of the dealers throughout the entire country, who claim that their profit in railroad movements made by the Elgin and Waltham companies were cut to pieces by excessive competition. I have here in my possession a package of letters written both before and since the adoption of this system of contracts, letters written by retail dealers, some of them urging and the others approving the system. These letters show very clearly that it was the retail dealers of the country who desired the adoption of this system.

Mr. NORRIS. What per cent of the total output of watches are covered by these contracts?

Mr. BOUTELL. Four per cent. In order that while we are considering this we may have full knowledge before us, I ask the Clerk to read one letter from a retail dealer in Mason City, Iowa, and will ask permission of the committee to print the other letters in an appendix to my remarks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that is done I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman, as I understood him, stated a moment ago that the Elgin Company was declaring a dividend of 8 per cent and had a surplus and tangible assets of $7,000,000.

Mr. BOUTELL. No; that is the Waltham Company.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much was it?

Mr. BOUTELL. The tangible assets of the Elgin Company, as reported, are about $6,000,000, without taking into account intangible assets.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, in connection with the stock, does the gentleman know whether the company has any outstanding bonded indebtedness or not?

Mr. BOUTELL. I do not know, but I think not.

The Clerk read the letter referred to, as follows:

IOWA RETAIL JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION, OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Mason City, Iowa, March 2, 1906.

WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY,
Waltham, Mass.

GENTLEMEN: It seems to be the opinion of the jewelers over the United States that there should be a minimum selling price set on watches.

Iowa has lately organized a retail jewelers' association, and it was the unanimous opinion of everyone there that this should be the case. It has long been the writer's opinion that this should be the case, and it would eliminate many unpleasant things concerning the selling of watches and eliminate a great deal of shopping. As it is, there is no fixed selling price among the jewelers concerning watches, and which we have to sell at what we consider is a legitimate profit, and there is a wide variance of what this profit should be.

I think, as a representative and secretary of our association, that I am voicing the sentiments of the jewelers of this State when I say that it would suit us better if the representative watch companies of the United States would sell their watches under a restrictive contract and a fixed selling price on the same basis that the Victor Talking Machine Company, the Columbia and the National Phonograph Company, the Eastman Kodak Company, and others that I might mention are selling their goods.

As a dealer in these lines that I have spoken of, I have found it to be very advantageous and eliminates many unpleasant features, especially the shopping propensities of many buyers. At the same time it does not eliminate competition; it simply leaves the matter up to the firm having the best salesmen to sell the goods.

It is my opinion that a fixed selling price could be fixed on movements and also the same on the case, and the selling price to be a combination of both. In selling talking machines the price is quoted for the machine with a small horn; this could represent the movement. I almost invariably sell the machine with the much larger horn, and in these cases I simply add the price of the horn to the selling price of the machine. This gives me the correct price that the factory wishes me to sell at.

I would like you to give me a frank expression on this matter to present to our association.

Yours, very respectfully, J. H. LEPPER.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question or two to see if we understand the facts in this case. According to his statement and the statement of his colleague [Mr. RAINEY], I understand that it is agreed that there are watches of a certain class that are manufactured in this country that railroad men are required by the railroads to buy.

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And no matter what the reason may be for doing so, I understand that these watch companies, on that particular class of railroad watches that the railroad men are required to buy, have fixed the price by contracts in restraint of trade, and that those watches can not be sold for less than that amount. Do we agree on that statement of facts?

Mr. BOUTELL. The contract, as I understand it, fixes the price at which both the jobber and the retailer shall sell this particular kind of movements, referred to in the contracts.

Mr UNDERWOOD. And that both great companies, or the great companies in this country engaged in the manufacture of watches, are all parties to contracts of that kind in reference to these railroad watches?

Mr. BOUTELL. That I do not know. I am simply giving the facts relating to these two companies.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The letters of these two companies admit that to be the fact, do they not?

Mr. BOUTELL. No. The letter which has just been read is a letter from a retail watch dealer in Iowa, asking that similar contracts be applied to all retail sales of watches instead of simply to the railroad watches as at the present time, which watches constitute only 4 per cent of the total output.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it not admitted by the gentleman that the Elgin Watch Company and the Waltham Watch Company as to railroad watches do have this contract with all dealers?

Mr. BOUTELL. All those who handle the watches.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So that as to railroad watches there is a trust or a combination in restraint of trade?

Mr. BOUTELL. Hardly, as the gentleman will see when I come to the contract on those watches which constitute this small fraction of the whole output. These contracts have nothing to do with any relation between the manufacturers; they are simply individual contracts made by each company with its jobbers and retailers, and the reasons for these contracts are these. The dealers who insist on these contracts are retail jewelers along the line of the railroads, who get appointed subinspectors, and when they sell a watch it is understood in the business with the railroad employees that they will keep track of and examine and regulate all of these watches for an indefinite time; and these retail jewelers acting as subinspectors want to get a little margin above the ordinary retail price to reimburse them for this extra service. And, furthermore, these movements are seldom sold for cash, but usually on installments at the retailer's risk. It is a contract in which the manufacturers have no interest whatever. These contracts bring no additional profit either to the manufacturer or to the jobber.

Now, I pass to another subject. My colleague asserts on the strength of Keene's advertisement that the various watch movements made by the Elgin Watch Company and the Waltham Watch Company are sold at Keene's at a price greatly below those for which the same movements can be purchased from the ordinary retail dealer. He quotes one advertisement of February 2, 1906, but fails to call attention to a phrase near the end, which reads as follows: "The prices quoted below are for movements alone; I do not sell movements without cases or cases without movements."

Now, we all know that the watch consists of two parts, the movement and the case, and it is immaterial in a certain measure what the price fixed on the works is if the price on the case makes an abnormal or an unreasonable price for the complete watch. I have here in my possession two bills of Keene's, of Broadway, the one to Mr. W. Russ and another to Theodore Weigele, ordinary citizens, who purchased these advertised watches. I have no doubt they went in there pursuant to these advertisements.

Mr. RAINEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BOUTELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAINEY. I would like to ask my colleague if it is not true that the Waltham Company does not make cases?

Mr. BOUTELL. Neither the Elgin Company nor the Waltham Company makes cases. These two men evidently went into the hospitable shop of Mr. Keene and asked him for one of those antiprotection, trust-busting, tariff-smashing watches he advertised, and they were shown the watches to which I now refer. They bought them, paid for them, and took them away. Then they inquired of ordinary retail dealers and found that they had been defrauded; then they went to the Elgin Company and submitted these bills. Mr. Russ wrote a letter to the Elgin Company, which I will here insert in the RECORD:

HOBOKEN, N. J., March 19, 1906.

THE ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH COMPANY,
11 John street, New York City, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: I recently purchased an Elgin watch of Charles A. Keene, 180 Broadway, New York City. This dealer has been advertising cut prices on Elgin and Waltham movements in the New York Herald and New York Press for some time, which attracted my attention, as I had in mind to purchase a watch. I went into his place of business at 180 Broadway March 14 with the intention of purchasing a cheap Elgin watch. A salesman showed me several makes, and upon request showed me an Elgin, No. 11285859, in a twenty-year Dueber case, No. 5917320, which he said would cost $25. Being satisfied to pay that much for a good watch, and feeling certain that I struck a bargain, I purchased this watch at that price. Several days later I heard different reports as to the character of this dealer, and at once became suspicious. After taking it to several other dealers, I found that I could purchase the identical watch for $15.

I trust that my experience, as related above, will be interesting to you, and sincerely hope that you will do something to stop this dealer from further robbing the public, as I presume I am only one of many who have gone into this store with the intention of buying a "cheap watch."

Very truly, yours, WALTER RUSS.

Here we have the receipted bill, dated March 14, 1906, made by Charles A. Keene to Mr. Russ, for an Elgin watch, 17 jewels, open face, 18 size, twenty-year filled case. It is billed at $25 for the completed watch. This watch, it appears from the statement of Mr. Kinna, can be purchased as follows: The works, $5.08; case, $3.50; complete watch to ordinary retailers in the trade, $8.58; profit at $25, $16.42, or a profit of 191½ per cent. [Laughter.] As shown by the record of the Elgin Watch Company, that keeps a record of all of its watches, neither of these watches was ever sold abroad.

The next is a similar receipted bill from Charles A. Keene to Theodore Weigele, Hoboken, N. J., March 17, 1906, for a 15-jewel Elgin watch, twenty-five-year gold-filled case, which is likewise billed and sold at $25. Mr. Kinna states that this watch just as it stands, movement and case, can be purchased by retail jewelers at $9.13. So the profit on the price at which Keene sold it is 175 per cent. I repeat that neither of these watches, notwithstanding the advertisement, ever went abroad.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman upon whose authority he is stating that these watches were sold at these percentages of profit that he has just stated?

Mr. BOUTELL. The opinion given by the officers of these companies from the retail dealers to whom they were submitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The officers of these companies submitted these receipts to retail dealers?

Mr. BOUTELL. Submitted these watches to retail dealers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did they have the watches that these men had bought?

Mr. BOUTELL. I understand they had the watches themselves.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And officers of the companies submitted them to the retailers and the retailers gave this opinion?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the officers of the companies send the gentleman the names of the retailers to whom they were submitted?

Mr. BOUTELL. I think I have the names of the retailers and the affidavits of the retailers relating to the watches, and if so, I will insert them in the appendix to my remarks.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if these are the original receipted bills?

Mr. BOUTELL. They are the original receipted bills.

Mr. DALZELL. By Keene?

Mr. BOUTELL. There is no question about it. There is no attempt to get at anything except the actual facts in the case. The watches as advertised had not been exported. The watches as advertised were sold in cases at much more than their value.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to get at the truth, and I know at the same time that the gentleman desires to get at the truth. The gentleman is stating nothing of his own knowledge, and I want to get at the source of the gentleman's information. What is the source of the gentleman's statement that these watches were never exported?

Mr. BOUTELL. The statement of the officers of the Elgin Watch Company from their own records. They keep a record of all their sales of watches and of all watches exported.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if he will give us the cable address of this man Keene?

Mr. BOUTELL. The cable address of this man was given earlier in my remarks, but this would seem to be a proper place for repeating it, in answer to the gentleman's question. It is "Keenness," and as I remarked before, as appears from all the examinations I have been able to make, for keenness he is a veritable stem-winder.

Now, the time is passing rapidly by, and I can not go into the details of the subject to which I would like now to briefly call the attention of gentlemen of the committee.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. Take the time.

Mr. BOUTELL. Gentlemen are very kind, but I must not weary the patience of the committee. My colleague from Illinois—and those of you who heard it can bear me out and those of you who did not can see it in the RECORD—made another positive assertion that all these watches are imported from abroad—all these watches in the stock of Keene, of Broadway. The Waltham Company, seeing this advertisement of their own watches which were said to have been exported and reimported, giving the numbers, sent men, unknown to Keene, to buy some of the watches, and they have purchased in this way, in the ordinary course of business, six of these watches. This was a mere business step, of course, on their part, to see what truth, if any, there was in this statement that their watches in this stock were all reimported watches, and of course we are simply interested in knowing what truth there is in the statement confidently made by my colleague, that all of them have been reimported. Theses watches I have just referred to, I will state, are now in the committee room of the Committee on Ways and Means—if anyone has any curiosity at all to examine them—with the numbers attached to them, and most of them have the private mark of Keene, of Broadway, on the inside of the case, discernible with a glass.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the gentleman a question—whether or not his colleague from Illinois, in speaking of the reimportation of watches, did not refer to the watches that he was exhibiting here?

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, my colleague's statement, I think, is such that there can be no mistake in respect to its interpretation, as we read the language in the RECORD. He was referring to the stock of watches as advertised by Keene, of Broadway.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I did not so understand it at that time.

Mr. BOUTELL. He said: "Remember all these watches have been reimported."

Mr. RAINEY. All the watches embraced in his so-called "protection" sale. That is what I said.

Mr. BOUTELL. Absolutely; that is it exactly.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, as I understood my colleague from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], he held up certain watches and gave the numbers of those watches and said that they were made in Illinois at the Elgin Watch Company, or at Waltham, Mass., by the Waltham Watch Company; that those identical watches were sent abroad and returned and sold here cheaper. Has my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] investigated as to the truthfulness of those statements with reference to the watches that my colleague from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] held up in the presence of the Committee of the Whole House?

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, the watches referred to and held up here as reimported watches may have been such. I believe that few of the high-grade watches were ever exported as advertised. In one of these advertisements Keene says he succeeded in getting hold of thousands—notice the language in the advertisement—of watches of the Elgin company of certain of their best makes. The record of the Elgin company shows that in five years only thirty-seven of that particular make of watches were sold for export.

I refer now to the Waltham watch known as the "Traveler" movement No. 11918774, in a ten-year gold-filled hunting case, which was sold by Keene on January 20, 1906, for $10 just as it stands. I have here the affidavit of the man making the purchase. The identity of the watch is proved by Keene's private mark scratched on the watch case, reading "K S 1-20-06." This watch was submitted to the old established concern of A. C. Benedict & Co., doing business at 28 Bowery, New York, a concern which has been established in the same spot since the year 1818, and Robert S. Ferguson, the proprietor of that firm, makes affidavit that he would sell a watch, movement and case complete, similar in every respect to this one, in the ordinary course of business for $10, which is exactly Keene's price.

The next exhibit is a "Riverside Maximus," Waltham movement, Montauk, twenty-year gold-filled open-faced case, movement No. 11570101, and the case is No. 7305085. The movement in this watch was advertised by Mr. Keene at $42.30, with the usual extravagant statements with regard to lowness of his price compared with those of other dealers, and the assertion that he was able to sell the movements so low because they were purchased abroad. The complete watch was sold by Keene on January 27, 1906, for $54.30. This complete watch was submitted to the same firm of A. C. Benedict & Co., who quoted the price at which they would sell the identical watch, movement and case complete, in the ordinary course of business at $55, only 70 cents more than Mr. Keene's boasted low price.

Mr. RAINEY. Is it not true the watch the gentleman has just described is one of the movements that can not be sold for less than $60 under this contract they exact from retailers? And if that is true, then this retailer has violated his contract with this company.

Mr. BOUTELL. I do not think so. These contracts only cover lever setting Riverside Maximus movement. This movement, being a stem setting, is not under the contract.

Mr. RAINEY. I put the contract in the RECORD, and it shows for itself.

Mr. BOUTELL. The next exhibit is a so-called "lady's Waltham" movement, 10574385, in a 14-carat gold open-face case. This movement was advertised on January 28, 1906, at $9.98. It was sold in the case for $29.98. I have here the bill and price at which it was sold.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman state the kind of case in which that was sold?

Mr. BOUTELL. It was a 14-carat gold open-face case.

Mr. RAINEY. They are the most expensive cases, I believe?

Mr. BOUTELL. Benedicts quote as their price for that kind of case and movement, $23. There are several other instances——

Mr. RAINEY. I will ask my colleague to describe what kind of a case that was.

Mr. BOUTELL. That is the same one I answered my colleague about just now.

Mr. RAINEY. A 14-carat gold case is the most expensive case made, I believe?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Does the record kept by the watch people show any of these watches had been exported?

Mr. BOUTELL. No; they had not been exported.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question at that point.

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Do the affidavits or statements of these retailers that you produce here show that they have been selling at the prices stated, or do they say they would sell at those prices?

Mr. BOUTELL. That the prices given would be the ordinary retail prices for these watches.

The next exhibit is a Waltham "Grade No. 820" movement, having the serial number 11725401. This movement was advertised by Mr. Keene in the New York Sunday Herald of February 4, 1906, at $3.98. It was sold by Mr. Keene in a twenty-year, gold-filled, open-faced case on February 6, 1906, for $13.98. The price of A. C. Benedict & Co. for the same movement and case identically is $10. I have here the affidavit of the person making the purchase, and the bill rendered by Mr. Keene for the same.

The next exhibit is a Waltham 15-jewelled, 16-size movement, No. 11456022, which was sold June 21, 1905, for $15 for the complete watch. I have here the bill for the same and the affidavit of the purchaser. The price of A. C. Benedict & Co. for the same movement and case identically is $13.

The last watch exhibit which I shall present you at this point is perhaps the most interesting of all. It is a Waltham "Royal" movement, No. 12599521, which was advertised by Mr. Keene at $10.98. The movement in this watch is exactly of the same grade and quality as the Royal movement mentioned by my colleague (RECORD, p. 4939), and of which he says: "Mr. Keene sells it for $10.98, cheaper than any retail dealer can buy it from the watch trust." Let us see how these alleged low prices of Mr. Keene's benefit the purchaser. Mr. Keene charged for the movement in a 14-karat, open-faced case $35.75. The price quoted by A. C. Benedict & Co. for exactly similar movement and case is $28. I have also the affidavit and bill accompanying this watch.

All the statements that I have made in regard to these exhibits of Waltham watches are sworn to, and the affidavits and bills are here for inspection by any Member.

Where Mr. Keene has advertised a complete watch at an apparently low price, it appears that he makes it practically impossible for anybody to purchase one, and that the offer is really fictitious. I have here three affidavits, one of J. V. V. Boss, another of John T. McGovern, and a third from Robert E. Davidson, referring to Mr. Keene's advertisements of cased Elgin watches at $5.98, and stating that they called at Mr. Keene's store and endeavored to purchase one of such watches, but were told in one case that they had no such watches and in the other cases that they were out of such watches, and in each instance the salesman endeavored to sell to these affiants watches of another manufacture.

From these exhibits it may be seen how much reliance may be placed upon the attractively low prices quoted by Mr. Keene for various watch movements.

On page 4912, in the second column, my colleague said, and I quote here his exact remarks:

> Now, all of these watches in this store at 180 Broadway have been reimported from England. Every one of them has been reimported.

That is the end of the quotation. I want to call the attention of my friend from Mississippi to that, also my friend from Kentucky, who asked about that point. I have quoted the language exactly from the RECORD, and in that blunt, confident, positive assertion, without any corroboration from any authority, he states that all of these watches in this store at 180 Broadway have been reimported from England.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend allow me to ask a question? I have been detained from the Chamber and missed a greater portion of the gentleman's valuable speech, and now I would ask that he permit me to ask him this question: Do you claim that watches are not made in America and sold to foreigners cheaper than to the people over here?

Mr. BOUTELL. I would say, in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, that he puts that question in just the form in which we sometimes hear on the floor of this House a question put and the demand made that it should be answered "yes" or "no" and the assertion that you can always answer any question "yes" or "no." Now, I answer the question from the information I have gotten from these men acquainted with the watch business that no watches are manufactured in this country and sold abroad to consumers cheaper than they are to consumers here. I would say further that I have statements and affidavits here to corroborate this opinion. First, you must bear in mind that there are three transactions in the watch trade, as we learn from the correspondence that has been read. The manufacturer sells to the wholesaler—he calls him the jobber. The jobber sells to the retailer, and the retailer sells to the customer. That is on the good old principle, "live and let live." And I understand that according to a code of honor in business all first-class manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers try to live up to this rule. So that when the gentleman from Tennessee asked the question whether watches are made and sold abroad cheaper than they are here, he can quite readily see that any intelligent answer needs explanation. The real question is not whether the watch is sold cheaper to the jobber or the retailer, but does the consumer, the real one in whom we are interested, get it cheaper? The affidavits I have here and their reference to the several American watches show that a retailer in London, England, sells an American watch, if he sells it at all, at a higher price than the American consumer gets it in this country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Let us see if I can not get your question along by degrees. Do you sell cheaper over there to the jobber than to the jobber in the United States?

Mr. BOUTELL. The gentleman from Tennessee uses a pronoun to which I object. I do not do anything about it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the manufacturer?

Mr. BOUTELL. I do not know anything about that except this—except as I am bringing forward the statements of those familiar with the business—and if the gentleman had been on the floor at the time when I gave the full source of my information and the names of all my informants—I gave it as freely as if I had been cross-examined—he would have known to whom I refer.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I regret I was not here, and regret I interrupted the gentleman now, and will not interrupt him further.

Mr. BOUTELL. Neither one of these companies export or ever has exported to Europe any considerable number of these so-called "railroad" movements, including the Elgin Veritas, 23 jewels, or the Waltham Vanguard, 23 jewels, and any statement made by Keene or anybody else to the contrary would appear to be absolutely without foundation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I dislike very much to disturb the gentleman. We know, of course, he is speaking only from information from others. Have you any information in your possession that would enable you to answer the question whether our manufacturers—the Elgin Company or the Waltham Company—sell to the jobber abroad any cheaper than to the jobber here?

Mr. BOUTELL. I have no full information on that subject, but my impression in reference to this whole business of exporting watches is simply this, that the watch manufacturers of this country are endeavoring to build up, and succeeding to a certain extent in building up, an expert business in a class of very low-grade watches for which there is no market in this country.

Now, that, as I understand it, is about the sum and substance of the watch export business. As I understand it, the wearer of the cheaper watches in this country almost always want a nickel-plate watch. Some of these watches——

Mr. WILLIAMS. You do not mean a nickel price, but a nickel case.

Mr. BOUTELL. A nickel plate. At any rate they tell me that the cheap watches, for which they are opening up a trade, are what they call "gilt-plate watches," and these "gilt watches," so called, if there was any market for them in this country, would be sold just as cheap or cheaper in this country than abroad.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But at the same time you are under the impression that they are sold cheaper abroad?

Mr. BOUTELL. My impression is that the sale of these cheap watches, for which there is no market in this country, would be perhaps 5 or 10 per cent cheaper to the jobber abroad than they would be sold in this country, if they were sold at all, and that the retailer makes a much larger profit abroad.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And you think that would apply only to watches of that class and sort?

Mr. BOUTELL. I understand that American watches of the better class have little market abroad; and if the gentleman from Mississippi will allow me to finish this paragraph, it may throw some light on the question. In one of these advertisements we find these words:

> For the past two years I have been secretly following up the watch trust and their nefarious methods of selling watches to far-away countries for a mere fraction of the prices they charge for identically the same grades in the United States. My buyer quietly went to London and bought thousands of all grades of those watches.

And then Keene enumerates Elgin Veritas, 23 jewels; Elgin B. W. Raymond, 19 jewels; Elgin Veritas, 21 jewels; Elgin Father Time, 21 jewels. Now, the Elgin people say from their records that since 1901, five years ago, not one Elgin Veritas, 23 jewels, and not one B. W. Raymond, 19 jewels, has been exported to Europe by or for the Elgin Company, and only thirty-seven Elgin Veritas and Elgin Father Time movements collectively.

But we have still further evidence of the incorrectness of the statement that is deluding the ordinary public, that all the watches in this store are reimported and therefore can be sold more cheaply than by the ordinary retailer. It seems that these honorable watch companies have in connection with their trade what is called a "rebate sysem." That is, people in the trade who have their watches in possession and have not disposed of them, when there is some reduction made in the price by the manufacturers, are allowed to send in a report of the watches which they have on hand, duly verified, and obtain this rebate. The officers of the Waltham Company have brought here, supported by affidavits, the original list, with the stamp of Keene upon it, of the watches upon which he claims this rebate, and bearing in mind the statement of my colleague [Mr. RAINEY] that all the watches in this store are imported, we are simply stunned to find that only a very small fraction of these watches—not over 20 per cent—ever were exported. So we have here the exhibition of this distinguished financier, as it were, hoist by his own petard. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Do these companies keep a record of their watches?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes; they keep a record of all their watches.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Clear through to the consumer?

Mr. BOUTELL. No.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. How far do they trace each watch on the books of their company?

Mr. BOUTELL. They trace their watches to the jobber. The two Elgin watches referred to by my colleague [Mr. RAINEY], Nos. 7877492 and 10925821, are both gilt plate watches made solely for the foreign trade, to which I referred a few moments ago. The former of these two Elgin watches left the factory eight years ago, which is entirely sufficient evidence that it is at least not a new watch. Since that time the Elgin Company has never sold any watches of similar kind in this country, and when he states that any other dealer would ask a certain price for the watch, he states something which is obviously impossible, since the watches in question are not sold in this country at all, and the president of the Elgin Company tells us that if the company made this watch for this market the dealer would buy in this country just as cheaply as abroad.

So, Mr. Chairman, with the leave to insert some of these exhibits and affidavits in the appendix to my remarks, and to extend my remarks, I will hasten on to my close by referring briefly to what has been done by these companies in carrying on their business in establishing a foreign market. I do not know whether I understood the gentleman from Illinois corectly or not——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me right there ask another question.

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Elgin Company keep a list of the watches that they export?

Mr. BOUTELL. So I understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They do not keep any list of watches that jobbers buy from them and export, or that case makers export, do they?

Mr. BOUTELL. I do not understand that their record would show the export of these watches by jobbers other than their agents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is quite possible, then, that watches may have been exported by somebody else than the Elgin Company?

Mr. BOUTELL. Oh, yes; or people traveling abroad may have disposed of a few.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that I understood your colleague [Mr. RAINEY] aright the day he was talking, but as I understood him, Mr. Keene had exported some.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOUTELL. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] a few days ago, if I remember correctly, stated that the agent of Keene in London bought a large number of watches in Manchester, and these watches were made by the Elgin Watch Company and the Waltham Watch Company, and that he (Keene) had caused these watches to be reimported; that on arrival here they were held up, and that it was shown that Swiss dials had been substituted for American dials so as to prevent reimportation on the ground that they had been improved. Has the gentleman any information in relation to that?

Mr. RAINEY. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BOUTELL. The gentleman from Michigan has asked for some information.

Mr. RAINEY. Very well, I will wait.

Mr. BOUTELL. Whatever watches have been reimported into this country, of course, in the very nature of things, can for the most part only be watches of the cheaper grades that have been exported.

Mr. HAMILTON. The gentleman said 2,000 watches, if I remember.

Mr. BOUTELL. Well, there may have been that number held up under the law until duties had been paid.

Mr. RAINEY. Is it not true that Waltham movements are exported by the Keystone company in Keystone cases?

Mr. BOUTELL. That I do not know; but I think not. Neither the Elgin company nor the Waltham company makes cases. If they sell the watches abroad—that is, complete watches—they have to purchase the cases. The Waltham company does no business, as I am informed, through the Keystone company.

Mr. RAINEY. Is it not true that the Keystone company is exporting the Waltham movements abroad in Keystone cases, and therefore when the gentleman says that the Waltham company has not exported any railroad watches he is telling the truth? But did not the Keystone company in London make the defense to Michael Brothers, as I set out in my speech here, to the suit brought by them against the Keystone company on account of 2,000 Waltham movements in Keystone cases contracted for by the plaintiffs in this suit, did they not file a plea that it had been represented to them that these movements were to be exported to France and that they now knew that they were to be reimported into the United States, and for that reason they claimed the plaintiffs had no right to recover in this suit?

Mr. BOUTELL. I do not find that I have any memorandum on that subject from the Waltham company, and my colleague in his speech made no such statement respecting that company.

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman's investigation into the watch companies has not led to any denial of that fact.

Mr. BOUTELL. If I find any denial I will insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman's investigation into the subject does not bring any denial to the fact stated in my speech that on the 24th of March of this year there were 2,400 American watches in New York held up in the New York custom-house by the Waltham Watch Company upon the theory that Swiss dials had been added to them and that they had thus been improved, and therefore could not be admitted to this country without the payment of duty. Has the Waltham Watch Company ever denied that?

Mr. BOUTELL. That is the correct law, isn't it?

Mr. RAINEY. Did the Waltham Watch Company deny that they protested against the admission of 2,400 American watches on the theory that 1,209 of them had been improved in value while abroad by putting a Swiss dial on them worth 4 cents apiece?

Mr. BOUTELL. According to my colleague, apparently not. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RAINEY. Until the Waltham Watch Company and the Keystone Company deny these charges which I have made against them, the charges are admitted by them.

Mr. BOUTELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, my colleague seems to find there is something sinister in the exportation of watches.

Mr. RAINEY. The Waltham Watch Company and the Elgin Watch Company do not deny any statements that are of record against them. They dare not deny them under oath or in any other way. They only deny some statements that are not of record.

Mr. BOUTELL. Nobody here is under oath at the present time. I venture the suggestion, however, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that the signed statement by the president of the Waltham Watch Company, Mr. Fitch, and Mr. Hulburd, of the Elgin Watch Company, are entitled to as much credence in this committee and I think will be given much more credence before the country than the uncorroborated advertisements of Mr. Keene, of lower Broadway. Now, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield any further, as I have already taken too much time. No one wishes to deny the fact that these companies are attempting to build up an export trade in cheaper watches, and if anybody wishes to reimport these cheaper watches for their own advertising purposes, or for any other purpose, it does not affect the issue we have before us here to-day. What are the facts and what are the reasons for this building up of the export trade? I wish in conclusion, in a few words, to show how they are attempting to build up the foreign trade, and I wish to say that it comports exactly with the careful opinion given by my colleague some time ago.

On the 23d of October the Chicago Evening Post gave a sort of symposium of the opinions of certain Illinois Representatives on the subject of the tariff, and it is significant that the remarks of my colleague, of the Twentieth district, begin with these words:

> In order to keep both capital and labor employed we must seek a market for our goods beyond the sea.

These companies are endeavoring to seek a market beyond the sea for such goods as there is a market for, and the establishment of a foreign market is in a measure necessary in order always to safeguard our industries at home. In periods of depression the manufacturer can, by selling an important part of his product abroad, keep his shops open and his workmen employed at home until the time of stagnation is over. Without the foreign market, which is not available unless previously developed, his only alternative would be to shut down his works and throw his people out of employment. In other words, the establishment of this foreign market furnishes an outlet which provides steady work for the American wage-earner. This is further shown in the history of the Elgin Watch Company, of my own State, of which all the people of Illinois are so justly proud. Prior to 1893 that company had no export trade at all. When the panic of that year came, the sales of that company diminished from $350,000 per month to $50,000 per month. The company was then paying out in wages more than three times its total sales. It could not stand this very long, and was obliged to lay off more than one-half of its employees and reduce the wages from the president down. Finally, only a small portion of the company's force was at work. After this experience the officers of the company felt that it was essential, for the sake of the company and for the sake of its employees, to endeavor to obtain a world's market, so that a panic in one place would not entirely destroy the company's business or organization.

In the panic of 1893 great numbers of employees of all American watch companies sought employment in other lines, and gave up watch making entirely. When business revived the companies were obliged to train new operators in their places, which has been a very long and a very costly task.

This, Mr. Chairman, substantially closes what I have to say in reference to the statements made by my colleague. Certainly, when he came away from New York, Keene, of Broadway, furnished him not only with those watches and those express company certificates, but he must have imposed upon him a most rococo assortment of mental suggestions as to the business of these two companies about which he knew nothing whatever. I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] with his devotion to "intellectual integrity" will agree with me that there has been no such statement of facts by my colleague as makes it worth while to discuss, at least at this time, the assumptions or conclusions in his remarks.

I had almost forgotten one matter that I had before me. I asked Mr. Hulburt, the president of the Elgin company, to tell me frankly the condition of the people, the working people, in his employ, and he gave me that information very fully. My colleague, after saying that these two companies were parties to a trust,—a big four in a trust—and that sounds portentous; it suggests some sort of an ogre going around through a dark wood with a club ready to hit the retailer and consumer—after, I say, stating bluntly that these two concerns were part of a trust, my colleague stated in other parts of his remarks that the employment of women by the watch companies had increased and that they were employing children in their factories. I want to say in denial of that assertion concerning the model factory of my State, that we have in our State of Illinois the most generous and most enlightened factory and compulsory education laws in the world. [Applause.] They have substantially the same laws in the State of Massachusetts. In neither of those States can any child be employed who is under 14 years of age. Between the ages of 14 and 16 he must have the certificate of his parent or guardian as to his age and as to his school attendance.

The president of the Elgin Company assures me that the ratio between men and women in their factory has not varied 5 per cent in sixteen years. At the present time he states that the ratio of men to women is as 51 to 49, and that there are no children employed in his factory at all. Substantially the same applies to the Waltham Company. In reference to the condition of the men and women in the beautiful city of Elgin, I want to testify myself, for in the city of Elgin is one of the academies of the Northwestern University, of Evanston, Ill., of which I have the honor to be an alumnus and a trustee. I have known many of the boys and girls that have come up from that academy to the Northwestern University from the families of those engaged in this watch factory. They are among the best-paid, the most intelligent, and the best-educated mechanics in the State of Illinois, and, I think, anywhere in the world, unless it be the Waltham employees, who are fully as good. Mr. Hulburd said that he would ask the Elgin employees what they would say in reference to a proposal to repeal the present tariff on watches or to a reduction in the duty on watches. I received, in the Ways and Means Committee room a few days ago, this communication. I do not know for whom my distinguished colleague is speaking when he attacks these two companies and the fiscal system under which their prosperity has been attained. I can simply say, in recognition of this communication, that the Republican party will at least endeavor to see that the workmen of this factory are not prejudiced by anything we may do. This is the communication:

WATCH WORKERS' UNION,
Elgin, Ill., April 18, 1906.

Hon. H. S. BOUTELL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Whereas attempts have been made by certain Members of Congress to remove the duty on watches, which action would, in our opinion, be extremely detrimental to the watch industry of this country: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Watch Workers' Union No. 6961, American Federation of Labor, enters an emphatic protest against any removal or reduction of the tariff on watches or parts of watches, and request you to work and vote against the same.

Respectfully, yours,

[SEAL.] WATCH WORKERS' UNION, Elgin, Ill.
J. W. LEGATE, Secretary.

This is all I care to say in reference to the assumptions or conclusions in my colleague's speech, and I think the gentleman from Mississippi will perhaps agree with me——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the gentleman if he has letters to read to the House from people who buy watches?

Mr. BOUTELL. The gentleman from Mississippi asked me if I have any letter from anybody in this country who buys watches. I began my remarks by saying the watch for which I paid $55 in 1874 can now be bought for $18, and that you can get a mighty good timepiece for $1. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, let me ask the gentleman a question there, because he has referred several times to-day to my admiration for intellectual integrity—and that is the seat and source of my admiration for the gentleman himself—is the gentleman of the opinion that that watch has been reduced in price because of the tariff which has been placed upon watches for the purpose of raising that price?

Mr. BOUTELL. The reduction in the price of watches, I will say to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi—and he knows this quite as well as I do—has been caused by the expiration of the original patents and the cheapening which has come in the reduction of the price of silver, and by American competition under our protective system. Now, in conclusion, I am very positive that there is one point on which the gentleman and I can agree, and that is the point upon which I started—that, owing to the faith and confidence that is given to Members upon the floor of this House, it is always wise to corroborate, if possible, all statements, to give references wherever possible, and in discussion of the question relating to changes in existing laws that the discussion should proceed with as near as possible judicial calmness and deliberation, and that no conclusions should be drawn except from a statement of facts upon the correctness of which we can all agree.

So it seems to me that when my distinguished colleague bases a proposition for reconstructing and revising our revenue system upon a display advertisement of Keene, of Broadway, of lower Broadway, and upon a letter to a periodical of our dear old friend, ex-Congressman Baker, the mercurial jester of the last House, he must have in mind that celebrated reply of the great Swedish chancellor, Oxenstierna, to his son, "You do not know, my boy, with how little wisdom the world is governed." [Applause.] There is an old adage, Mr. Chairman, "See Naples and die;" but New York is a much more wonderful place than Naples, much better worth seeing, and

I would say in closing, to all those who went to New York, especially to all those who have been taken in by Keene, of Broadway, of lower Broadway, "See New York and live—live it down!" [Loud and prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein extracts from sundry documents. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

APPENDIX.

HORNELLSVILLE, N. Y., February 6, 1905.

WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY,
Waltham, Mass.

GENTLEMEN: I inclose a circular put out by Frank E. Wickwire, of Elmira, N. Y. You will see the prices he is offering them at. This is creating a dissatisfaction among the railroad men. They think the regular jeweler is trying to do them on prices. Now, can't there be some way to stop this man getting the movement to sell? I have lately been appointed official watch inspector for Erie Railroad, to take effect February 1, and there will be lots of men that will have to have new movements. Please advise me regarding this.

Yours, truly,

L. L. KINNER.

GREENSBORO, N. C., June 26, 1905.

Messrs. ROBBINS & APPLETON.

GENTLEMEN: Jobbers selling at retail at wholesale prices; some jewelers advertising these goods at list, such as Mr. Leonard, in Winston, N. C. Of course this will stop, and the other retailers will see to it. As 90 per cent of our railroad grades are sold on time, we feel that the price you mention is not high enough to sell goods in four monthly installments, even if the railroad companies collect the money, as even in this plan there is a loss, and we shall therefore add from $3 to $5 a movement, as to grade, when we sell goods that way; same price as we always have sold them. Shall do all in our power to maintain this new system.

Yours, truly,

R. C. BERNAU.

LATROBE, PA., August 17, 1905.

WALTHAM WATCH COMPANY.

GENTLEMEN: I received your circular. Your scheme of selling your fine grade of watches is right. I know from my own experience dealers in our town have sold your high grade for as low as $1 profit.

Yours, truly,

C. W. HOFFMAN.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS,
County of Middlesex, ss:

Dame Anna Fahey, being duly sworn, deposes and says that she resides at the city of Waltham, in the State of Massachusetts, and that prior to about the 1st day of December, 1905, she was in the employ of the American Waltham Watch Company at Waltham, Mass.; that she was employed during the month of October, and that her position in said factory was that of accountant; that during the said month a list of watch movements as hereinafter given, and which was stamped with the name of Charles A. Keene, was handed to her with instructions to examine the books of the said company and see to what places the said movements were sent from the factory of the said company, which deponent proceeded to do, and found from the said books that the said movements were shipped to the places named after the respective numbers; that it appears from the said list only forty-six out of the total number of movements there given were sent by the said company to any foreign country; that the rest were all shipped to places in the United States.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM J. BANNAN,
Notary Public

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Southern District of New York, ss:

Joseph W. Goodwin, having been duly sworn, deposes and says: That he resides at Richmond Hill, Borough of Queens, New York City; that on April 10 and April 11, 1906, deponent called at the place of business of various representative jewelers in the Borough of Manhattan, city of New York, for the purpose of ascertaining the prices at which the Waltham watches, including the cases, described in the tabulation hereto annexed, would be sold by said jewelers in the ordinary course of business; that on April 11, 1906, deponent called at the place of business of George N. Joyce, jeweler, No. 123 Nassau street, Borough of Manhattan, New York City; that the prices in the annexed tabulation in the column under the words "George N. Joyce" are those stated by Mr. Joyce to be the prices at which the watches described therein would be sold by him; that on April 10, 1906, deponent called at the place of business of Benedict Brothers, jewelers, No. 141 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, New York City; that the prices in the annexed tabulation in the column under the words "Benedict Bros." are those stated by Mr. Courvasier, a salesman in said place of business, at which the watches described therein would be sold by Benedict Brothers; that on April 11, 1906, deponent called at the place of business of Howard & Co., jewelers, No. 264 Fifth avenue, Borough of Manhattan, New York City; that the prices in the annexed tabulation, in the column under the words "Howard & Co.," are those stated by Mr. Hoffman, a salesman in said place of business, at which the watches described therein would be sold by Howard & Co.

Deponent further says that the prices in the annexed tabulation, in the column under the word "English," are those stated in a catalogue published by H. W. Bedford & Co. (Limited), 6 Cheapside, London, E. C., in pounds sterling, and changed by deponent into dollars and cents at the rate of $4.80 per pound.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss:

Robert S. Ferguson, being duly sworn, says: That he resides at 529 Mount Hope place, Borough of Bronx, New York City, and is now sole proprietor of A. C. Benedict & Co., jewelers, established in the year 1818, and engaged in selling jewelry and watches at retail, and doing business at No. 28 Bowery, Borough of Manhattan, city of New York. Deponent says that he has been engaged in the jewelry business, particularly in buying watch movements and watch cases and selling them at retail, for upward of fifty years, in the city of New York.

Deponent further says that he has been shown and has examined a 16-size "Traveler" American Waltham watch movement, No. 11918774, in a ten-year, filled hunting case, No. 771030, and that he would sell a watch, movement and case, complete, similar in every respect to this one, in the ordinary course of business, for $10.

Deponent further says that he has been shown and has examined a 16-size "Riverside Maximus" American Waltham watch movement, 23 jewel, No. 11510701, in a Montauk twenty-year, gold-filled, open-face, screw-back case, No. 7305085, and that he would sell a watch, movement and case, complete, similar in every respect to this one, in the ordinary course of business, for $55.

Deponent further says that he has been shown and has examined an 0-size "Lady Waltham" American Waltham watch movement, No. 10574385, in a 14-carat gold, open-face case, No. 238026, made by Dubois Watch Case Company, and without a cap, and that he would sell a watch, movement and case, complete, similar in every respect to this one, in the ordinary course of business, for $23.

Deponent further says that he has been shown and has examined an 18-size "grade No. 820" American Waltham watch movement, 15 jewel, No. 11725401, in a S. W. C. Co. twenty-year, gold-filled, open-face, screw-back case, No. 558136, and that he would sell a watch, movement and case, complete, similar in every respect to this one, in the ordinary course of business, for $10.

Deponent further says that he has been shown and has examined a 16-size American Waltham watch movement, 15 jewel, No. 11456022, in a Montauk twenty-year, gold-filled, open-face, screw-back case, No. 7305742, and that he would sell a watch, movement and case, complete, similar in every respect to this one, in the ordinary course of business, for $13.

Deponent further says that he has been shown and has examined a 12-size "Royal" American Waltham watch movement, No. 12599521, in a Solidarity 14-carat open-face case, No. 203584, and that he would sell a watch, movement and case, complete, similar in every respect to this one, in the ordinary course of business, for $28.

Deponent further says that the aforementioned prices would in each instance insure him a fair profit on the cost of the movement and case complete.

CHARLES A. KEENE.

NOTE.—The foregoing bill is for the second watch, described in the following affidavit:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Southern District of New York, ss:

Harry Mousley having been duly sworn, deposes and says: That he resides at No. 109 South Oxford street, Borough of Brooklyn, New York City. That on the 20th day of January, 1906, deponent called at the place of business of Charles A. Keene, No. 180 Broadway, in the Borough of Manhattan, New York City, and there purchased a watch containing a 16-size movement, No. 11918774, known as the "Traveler," made by the American Waltham Watch Company, in a "Winner" case, No. 771030, and paid for the same $10. That the said watch purchased by deponent is marked "Exhibit 1," and the tag accompanying the same is identified by deponent's initials. That at the time when deponent purchased said watch the salesman selling the same scratched on the case of the watch a private mark, reading apparently as follows: K. S. 1-20-06.

That on the 6th day of February, 1906, deponent again called at the store of Charles A. Keene, No. 180 Broadway, and asked to see a 15-jewel Waltham, grade No. 820, which deponent had seen advertised in the Sunday Herald for $3.98. That deponent was told by the clerk in the said store that the price stated was for the movement only, and that the case alone for the movement would cost $10, as it was a large size. That the movement shown deponent was a grade No. 820, 15 jewel, 18 size Waltham, No. 11725401, and the case containing the same was an open-face, gold-filled S. W. C. Co., bearing the number 558136. Deponent purchased the said movement in said case and paid for the same $13.98, receiving a receipted bill for the same under the name of H. Stanley, which is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A." That the watch so purchased is marked "Exhibit 4," and is identified with deponent's initials.

Sworn to before me this 12th day of April, 1906.

CHARLES A. KEENE,
WHOLESALE WATCHES AND DIAMONDS,
180 Broadway, New York, January 27, 1906.

Sold to Miss Olano, 1319 Bedford avenue, one 20-year Riverside Maximus, $54.30. Fully warranted.
Received payment January 27, 1906.

CHARLES A. KEENE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Southern District of New York, ss:

Charles Olano, having been duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at No. 1319 Bedford avenue, borough of Brooklyn, New York City. That on the 23d day of January, 1906, deponent called at the store of Charles A. Keene, No. 180 Broadway, borough of Manhattan, New York City, and there asked one of the salesmen to show him a watch he had seen advertised in the New York Herald of January 21, 1906, as the "pride of the trust," at $9.98. That said clerk told deponent that they were not selling the watch referred to any more, but showed deponent a watch called the "Traveler," which he said they were advertising for $10. Deponent did not then buy.

That on the following day, January 26, deponent again called at the store of the said Charles A. Keene and asked to be shown a "Riverside Maximus," and was then told by the clerk that he could purchase a Riverside Maximus movement for $42.30 in a gold-filled $12 case, making the price $54.30 for the movement and case.

That on the following day, January 27, 1906, deponent again called at the store of Charles A. Keene with his wife, and then purchased a 16 size Riverside Maximus, 23 jewels, movement No. 11510701, made by the American Waltham Watch Company, in a Montauk open face, twenty-year, filled case, bearing the number 7305085, and paid for the same $54.30. That deponent at the time asked the clerk how he could sell the watch so cheap, and was told that they bought them in the open market and were fighting the trust and made practically nothing on the works, but their profits came in on the case. That deponent at the same time obtained a receipt, which is hereto attached marked "Exhibit B," with deponent's initials, and the watch so purchased is marked "Exhibit 2," and bears a tag identified with deponent's initials.

Marcie Dunn, having been duly sworn, deposes and says: That he resides at No. 345 West Twenty-seventh street, in the Borough of Manhattan, city of New York; that on the 29th day of January, 1906, he called at the store of Charles A. Keene, No. 180 Broadway, Borough of Manhattan, city of New York, and there asked to be shown a lady's Waltham 0 size, which deponent had seen advertised for $9.98. The salesman stated that he had no watch at that price. Deponent then went out and bought a New York Sunday World of January 28, 1906, and showed said salesman an advertisement by said Keene of a lady's Waltham for $9.98. The salesman then said: "Oh, that is what we charge for the movement." Deponent then asked what he would charge for the movement in a 14-karat open-face case. The salesman said $20 for the case and $9.98 for the movement, making in all $29.98. Deponent did not purchase on that day, but on February 1, 1906, deponent again called at the said store, and purchased the watch previously shown him, same being an 0 size lady's watch, containing a movement numbered 10574385, made by the American Waltham Watch Company, in an open-face case numbered 238026, and paid for the same $29.98. That on the following day, February 2, 1906, deponent called at the said store and obtained a receipt showing the payment for said watch, which receipt is hereto attached marked "Exhibit E." At the time the said watch was purchased deponent gave his name as Joseph Johnston, which name appears on said receipt.

Richard D. Dunn, having been duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at No. 345 West Twenty-seventh street, in the borough of Manhattan, city of New York. That on February 7, 1906, deponent called at the store of Charles A. Keene, No. 180 Broadway, borough of Manhattan, city of New York, and there asked to see a 12-size Waltham watch, known as the "Royal." A clerk in said store, whose name deponent learned is C. E. Katsch, then showed deponent such a movement in a 14 K. open-face case and stated that the price of the case was $22.75 and the price of the movement and case was $35.75. The said clerk also told deponent that such a watch would cost $40 in any other jewelry store. Deponent then paid a deposit of $2 on account of the watch and received a receipt for the same, with the understanding that the watch should be held for him.

That on February 16, 1906, deponent again called at the store of said Charles A. Keene and purchased the said watch, paying the balance of $33.75 for the same and receiving a receipt which is hereto attached, marked "Exhibit C." That the watch purchased by deponent was a 12-size Royal movement, No. 12599521, made by the American Waltham Watch Company. That the case was open faced, with cap, and bore the number 203584. Said watch is marked "Exhibit 6," identified with deponent's initials.

Comparative profits on Swiss and American watches.

The gravamen of my colleague's speech is the implied charge that American watches are sold by dealers at unreasonably large profits. The fact is that the jobber's profit on Elgin and Waltham watches is only 10 per cent and the retailer's profit is ordinarily not over 25 to 35 per cent, with a slightly higher rate on the railroad movements. On the other hand, it is well known throughout the trade that profits made by retail dealers on Swiss watches are very much greater than those made by retailers on American watches. I have here six Swiss watches with an affidavit showing the prices at which they may be bought by the retailer, the prices at which they were sold by retail dealers to their customers, and the bills rendered for them. These exhibits show that the profits of the various retail dealers on these six watches ranged from 54 to 100 per cent, and averaged for the whole six 77 per cent. These large profits can be obtained because Swiss watches, generally speaking, bear no trade-marks or other distinguishing marks by which a purchaser can identify the movement or determine its actual value. Thus he is entirely at the mercy of the dealer. In contrast to this, the better movements made by the Elgin and Waltham companies and practically all their high-grade movements bear well-known trade-marks by which any purchaser can identify the movements and can approximate their value and their fair selling price.

The following is the affidavit referred to:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Southern District of New York, ss:

Frederick Leach, having been duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at Tompkinsville, Borough of Richmond, New York City. That he has been in the watch business for over thirty years and is at present employed as material clerk for the firm of Robbins & Appleton, selling agents of the American Waltham Watch Company, at No. 21 Maiden Lane, Borough of Manhattan, New York City. That previous to his employment with the said firm, deponent was employed by retail dealers and jobbers of watches of all kinds, including Swiss watches, and was then and has always since been familiar with the prices at which Swiss watches of all grades are bought by retailers in New York City.

That on April 13, 1906, deponent purchased the six Swiss watches complete described in the following schedule and paid for the same.

That the prices set opposite each watch therein described, in the column under the words "Cost to consumer," are the prices paid by deponent in each instance for that particular watch complete; that at the time of such purchases deponent received with each watch a receipted bill describing the same, with the price paid, and said bills are hereto attached numbered corresponding to the watch exhibits themselves and identified with deponent's initials; that deponent has inquired of various jobbers in New York City and persons familiar with jobbers' prices as to the cost to the retailer of the various Swiss watches purchased by deponent, and from such inquiries and from deponent's own knowledge, deponent states that the prices set opposite the various watches in the column under the words "Cost to retailer" are in every instance in excess of the actual cost to retailers; that the figures under the words "Percentage of profit to retailers" represent the percentage of profit to the retailer upon each watch so purchased by deponent.

Comparison of wages.

SWISS.

About a year ago Mr. Burckes, an employee of the American Waltham Watch Company, made a visit to a large number of the more prominent Swiss watch factories, and carefully inquired as to the wages paid, with the following result: Women received from 2 to 3 francs (40 to 60 cents) per day, only a few skilled ones earning as high as 4 francs (80 cents) per day. Men received from 6 to 7 francs ($1.20 to $1.40) per day. These figures are corroborated by the figures given in consular reports (see below).

AMERICAN.

In the factory of the Waltham Company at Waltham, Mass., the average wages of women is $1.50 per day, and of men considerably over $3 per day. The wages paid by the Elgin Company in its factory at Elgin, Ill., are about the same as those in the Waltham factory for men and women separately, and for men, women, and children the average is $2.28.

This comparison shows that the prices paid by the American watch companies are from two to two and a half times as much as those paid in Switzerland for the same class of labor.

NOTE.—The authority referred to is a Government publication entitled "Special Consular Reports—Money and prices in foreign countries," Vol. XIII, part 1, 1896, p. 106, under heading "Wages in Switzerland in 1895." This publication is in the Bureau of Manufactures of the Department of Commerce at present in the Census building. It gives the following as the wages of mechanics and factory operatives in Switzerland in 1895:

Mechanics, per day, 3.7 francs to 7 francs (74 cents to $1.40).

Factory operatives, per day, 2 francs to 3.5 francs (40 cents to 70 cents).

These reports do not mention watchmakers separately, but they are presumably included in one or both of the foregoing classes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8997) to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 267) to prohibit aliens from fishing in the waters of Alaska, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. BACON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15911. An act to amend the laws of the United States relating to the registration of trade-marks; and

H. R. 11946. An act to amend section 6 of an act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17757. An act extending to the subport of Spokane, in the State of Washington, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutable merchandise without appraisement.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LAMB. I yield one hour to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] addressed the House at great length in support of the so-called "Gallinger ship-subsidy bill," now pending in the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which he is the chairman. In doleful tones the gentleman depicted the decline of our over-seas carrying trade and sorrowfully deplored the fact, which of late has become quite patent, that he was unable, with all his ability and astuteness, to secure enough votes in his own committee to have the bill favorably reported to this House. No doubt this is exasperating to the gentleman from Ohio, but we can console ourselves with the reflection that the taxpayers of the country will survive the gentleman's discomfiture without serious disaster.

We know the gentleman from Ohio is working, and has been working, assiduously in his committee and out of his committee for months, in season and out of season, for this ship-subsidy bill, but I do not think the honest people of the country generally sympathize with his arduous efforts any more than they did with the late Senator Mark Hanna's unwearied struggle to pass a similar ship-subsidy measure.

Now, let us see for a moment just what this Gallinger ship-subsidy bill—the bric-a-brac work of the Merchant Marine Commission—does, so that we will understand what we are considering. I will read the subsidy part of it: "That in the interest of the national defense and for the performance of the public services hereinafter specified, after July 1, 1907, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, subject to the provisions of this act, out of any money in the Treasury, to be annually appropriated therefor upon estimates to be annually submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates, to the owner or owners of any steam vessel of over 1,000 gross tons, and of any sail vessel of over 200 gross tons, and fishing vessel of over 20 gross tons hereafter built and registered in the United States or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), engaged exclusively as a common carrier for the service of the public, subventions [that is, subsidies; they both mean the same thing] as hereinafter provided—that is to say, (a) the sum of $5 per gross registered ton for each vessel which has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of twelve months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo, or not to exceed two months in making annual or extraordinary repairs; (b) the sum of $4 per gross registered ton for each vessel which during any twelve consecutive months has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of nine months or over, but less than twelve months, including the time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs; (c) the sum of $2.50 per gross registered ton for each vessel which during any twelve consecutive months has been engaged in the foreign trade by sea or the deep-sea fisheries for a period of six months or over, but less than nine months, including time necessarily consumed in receiving or discharging cargo or not to exceed one month in making extraordinary repairs." This is the salient subsidy feature of the Gallinger bill, and it is all I desire to read to the House at the present time for the purpose of this discussion.

Mr. Chairman, this ship-subsidy proposition is not a new one. It is the same old effort to get something from all the people for somebody for nothing. It has been pending in either one branch or the other of the Congress, in one form or another, for the last ten years. At one time it was the Hanna-Payne ship-subsidy bill, and Senator Hanna succeeded in passing it through the Senate, only to have it ignominiously defeated in the House of Representatives. In another Congress Senator Hanna did his very best to pass it again through the Senate, but failed, and in this Congress we have the old foe with a new face in the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill, introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire at the beginning of this session.

This Gallinger ship-subsidy bill differs but little in principle from its predecessors, and its fate should be the same. It is essentially a subsidy bill, and by subsidy I mean that the Government is compelled by law to take a part of its money, paid in taxes by all the people for the support of the Government, and give the money to a special interest to aid that interest in its special line of business. This is the scheme in a nutshell, and any policy of this character is inherently wrong in principle, constitutionally indefensible, and can not be justified by any theory of our system of government. Subsidies are monarchial and not republican; they have no place in a government of the people and by the people.

The Gallinger ship-subsidy bill was cleverly manipulated through the Senate on the 14th day of February last by a vote of 38 to 27. Not a Democratic Senator, I am glad to say, voted for the bill, and to their eternal fame be it said that five Republican Senators voted against it. These Republican Senators, in my opinion, are entitled to the commendation of the people, and I take great pleasure in giving their names. They were: Messrs. BURKETT, DOLLIVER, LA FOLLETTE, SPOONER, and WARNER. The American people should remember these names.

It is not my purpose to-day, Mr. Chairman, to discuss at length the cause of the decline of our deep-sea carrying trade, or my own views, if I could have my way in the matter, concerning the speediest remedy to restore our merchant marine. I have not the time at my disposal to do so, even if I wanted to go into an exhaustive examination of the intricate question. I want to speak to the House at this time briefly on this ship-subsidy question and frankly point out the evils incident to subsidies and sure to follow their adoption.

My position regarding this subject I believe is well known, but I want to say again to the Members of this House that I have always been, am now, and always hope to be opposed to every effort to place upon the statute books of our country a ship-subsidy law. I have given considerable study to this question and I think I know something about it. I agree substantially with the gentleman from Ohio regarding the deplorable condition of our merchant marine, but I differ with him absolutely respecting the cause of the decline of our over-seas carrying trade; and we are as far apart as the poles respecting the best and most practical remedy for the rehabilitation of our shipping industries and the carrying of our ocean trade in American ships, built by American workmen, manned by American sailors, and flying the American flag.

Mr. Chairman, it is a fact, and a most deplorable fact, and every man who has investigated the subject knows it, that we have less registered tonnage for ocean carrying trade to-day than we had one hundred years ago. In 1806 the United States, with a population of less than 7,000,000 inhabitants, owned more registered tonnage for ocean carrying trade than the United States in 1906, with a population of over 85,000,000. The American tonnage in 1806 was over 900,000, and it is now less than 800,000, and, what is worse still, it showed an actual decrease of more than 6,000 tons last year. In 1806 American ships, flying the American flag and manned by American sailors, carried over 90 per cent of our deep-sea trade and a great part of that of all the countries of Europe. To-day we carry very little of our own trade and practically none of other countries, notwithstanding the fact that we should be the foremost maritime power in the world. More than nine-tenths of our once great and powerful deep-sea fleet has vanished, and not one new keel for an ocean-going ship is being laid to-day on either our Atlantic or Pacific coast, while the vessels of foreign nations throng our ports and monopolize more than nine-tenths of all our import and export commerce.

In 1806 over 92 per cent of our export and import trade was carried in American bottoms; in 1906 less than 8 per cent of our imports and exports are carried in American ships. The United States pays to the owners of foreign deep-sea vessels for conveying our freights and passengers over $200,000,000 a year, and much of this vast sum of money goes to the owners of foreign steamers which are regularly enrolled on the merchant cruiser lists of European governments, manned by naval reserve officers and sailors, and available for immediate service against us in case of war. The British Empire has 14,800,000 tons of merchant shipping; Germany has 4,960,000 tons; France, 1,680,000; Norway, 1,460,000, and Italy, 1,280,000. The larger part of all these great deep-sea fleets is engaged in the ocean carrying trade, but the Government of the United States, which produces and exports more merchandise than any other nation on earth, has a fleet registry of deep-sea commerce of less than 800,000 tons.

I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that this statement of the facts exhibits a most deplorable condition of our merchant marine affairs, but I say to him, and I say to the country, that it is all our own fault, and due entirely to our own short-sighted maritime policy, and especially to our failure to enact proper navigation legislation.

The gentleman from Ohio seeks to remedy the situation by ship subsidies, and hence earnestly favors and eloquently advocates the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill, which is no remedy at all, but a mere temporary makeshift to rob the many for the benefit of the few, by taking money out of the pockets of the taxpayers generally and giving it to a few favored individuals. I am opposed to this subsidy policy. The taxpayers, when they understand it, will never consent to it. The Gallinger bill is a subsidy bill pure and simple, and at the very best is only a temporary expedient, and no one who understands this subject believes for a single moment that it will ever accomplish what its advocates so vociferously claim. A subsidy is a bounty, a bonus, a gratuity, and it never has succeeded, and it never will succeed, in accomplishing the purpose desired. All history proves it conclusively. Wherever and whenever it has been tried it has failed. In my opinion, if this Gallinger subsidy bill should pass as it is to-day it would not restore our American merchant marine or aid materially our shipbuilding industries. It is a waste of time to talk about ship subsidies, and I believe every honest American is absolutely opposed to them. We might just as well pass a bill to pay a subsidy to every man who grows a bushel of wheat, or a barrel of potatoes, or a bale of cotton, or who makes a wagon, or builds a locomotive, as to pay a subsidy to a man who builds a ship or sails a vessel.

The taxpayers of our country, burdened now almost beyond endurance are opposed to ship subsidies. They are opposed to this Gallinger gift bill. They say no private business interests should be aided by direct grants from the Treasury. Ship subsidies are subversive of the eternal principles of justice and equality, contrary to the theory of our free institutions, of doubtful expediency, and at war with the spirit of the Constitution. Congress has no power to subsidize any trade or any calling or any business on land or sea at the expense of the taxpayers of our country.

But, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, the Gallinger subsidy bill will not materially benefit our shipbuilding industries, and of course if it will not benefit the shipping industries of the country no new ships will be built and American tonnage on the high seas will not be increased, and only the ships now in commission will get the benefits of the subsidies. This being so, this Gallinger ship-subsidy bill, giving away from four to six millions of dollars a year, will benefit no shipowners except the Standard Oil trust, the American shipping trust, the New England fishing smacks, and perhaps a few vesels on the Pacific Ocean. It will be observed by reading the bill that the Senator from New Hampshire was particularly watchful of the interests of the fishing smacks that go out of New England ports to fish on the Grand Banks, and the bill provides that these small craft shall participate in the subsidy.

The principal ships, however, that would benefit by the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill and get most of the subsidies are the ships plying the high seas, owned by the American shipping trust and the Standard Oil trust. But at best the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill is only a temporary expedient—a mere makeshift—and unless it should be continued and the subsidies increased it will accomplish practically no good whatever. However, there are many far-seeing citizens who believe that this subsidy bill is a mere beginning—only an entering wedge—and that it will be followed ere long, if it becomes a law, by greatly increased subsidies until the Treasury is depleted or the patience of the taxpayers exhausted.

Mr. Chairman, the people who are clamoring the loudest for the ship-subsidy bill are the bounty beggars who will get the subsidies; but so far as I have been able to find out, I have heard no great demand from the honest folk of the country in favor of this iniquitous measure to take money out of the Treasury of the people and pay it over to the American shipping trust in order that it may get additional gratuities under this trust-ridden Republican Administration.

It seems to me, sir, that this is an inopportune time to ask for ship subsidies when the people all over the country are demanding a revision of the tariff, especially of those tax schedules which shelter monopoly and give protection to the trusts that sell their manufactured wares cheaper abroad than they do at home. But it seems that the chief argument of these ship-subsidy schemers, reduced to its simplest form and last analysis, amounts to about this: As all other monopolies are protected, therefore the shipping monopoly must be protected; as all other trusts are licensed to rob the many for the benefit of the few, therefore the shipping trust must have an opportunity to pilfer the people and get its share of the spoils. The plea, however, seems to come at a very unfortunate time, because from one end of the land to the other the people are demanding not only the prosecution of the criminal trusts, but the revision of all protective tariff taxes that aid and abet and shelter monopoly.

But the advocates and supporters of this ship-subsidy iniquity, by which all the people of the country are to be compelled to contribute a few millions of dollars a year to the American shipping trust, forget the history of the past and are reckless as to the consequences of the future. They seem to forget that consequences are unpitying, and that there is no cause without an effect. Their contention reminds one a good deal of a Chinese almanac in which every other day is labeled, "This is a lucky day to pay taxes." But these ship-subsidy grafters go even further, and write in their selfish almanac that every day is a lucky day to pay subsidies. If foreign governments grant subsidies, they say we should grant subsidies; and if foreign governments do not grant subsidies, they say that is the very reason we should grant subsidies. If foreign steamship owners raise the price of ocean freight rates, they get up in Congress and demand subsidies. If foreign steamship owners reduce ocean freight rates, they also get up in Congress and demand subsidies. Every wind that blows, in their opinion, evidently blows in favor of the Government giving the American shipping trust subsidies. But I am satisfied that the farmers and the toilers of our country, the men who pay the taxes, understand this subsidy question and are not in favor of putting their hands in their pockets and contributing gratuities to the extent of millions of dollars a year to any shipping trust or to any trust-owned steamship line.

Mr. Chairman, I have always been, and always expect to be, a sincere friend of our shipping industries and an enthusiastic advocate of just and proper and honest legislation that will build up and restore our merchant marine. I believe every true American desires the supremacy of American ships in our over-seas carrying trade, but I believe they prefer it along the lines of tonnage taxes, and not by subsidies. They see no necessity of taking money out of the Treasury and paying it to the present trust owners of ships for doing what they are already doing; and those most conversant with the subject even go so far as to declare that this Gallinger ship-subsidy scheme, if enacted into law, will not lay a new keel in any American shipyard, or secure an additional ton of freight of our over-seas commerce. Practically every dollar granted will go to the ships now afloat owned by the oil trust and the shipping trust.

Ship subsidies do not build ships—they create ocean-trading monopolies. Ship subsidies will not give workmen employment in American shipyards—the money will simply go into the capacious pockets of the plutocratic beneficiaries of the shipping trust. Every scheme of this kind simply permits respectable corruption and benefits the few at the expense of the many. The principle of ship subsidies is inherently wrong and absolutely indefensible—it is unrepublican, undemocratic, and un-American, and no man who understands the question can justify the steal in the face of the facts. If the Congress should pass this pilfering ship-subsidy bill, I believe the people will demand its repeal in less than five years, but I hope the wisdom of this House will never permit this iniquitous bill to pass.

Mr. Chairman, I am now, always have been, and always will be a friend of the American merchant marine. I long for the coming of the day when American ships will be on every sea, and our flag gloriously floating on the breeze in every port. I am willing to go as far as any man in this country to legislate for the restoration of the American merchant marine to all its former glory, and to secure for the American people their just share of the over-seas carrying trade of the world. As I have said, I do not agree with the reasons advanced by the advocates of the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill as to the cause of the decline of our merchant marine and the loss to the United States of our over-seas carrying trade. I know, and every man who has investigated this subject knows, that our loss of deep-sea commerce is due entirely to our own iniquitous legislation and short-sighted policies. If the American Congress would legislate intelligently regarding this subject, we could restore our merchant marine and secure nine-tenths of all our commerce on the high seas, exports and imports, without a ship subsidy, or without taking a single dollar from the pockets of the taxpayers to give subsidies to favored shipowners and shipbuilders. This whole subject is a very simple matter when reduced to an intelligent business proposition. We do not need to take a dollar out of the pockets of the taxpayers, or out of the Treasury of the United States, to revive our shipbuilding industries or restore our merchant marine. All we need to do is to legislate intelligently, repeal the iniquitous laws against our deep-sea shipping now on our statute books, put in their place laws similar to the navigation laws that were enacted by the early statesmen of the country—laws that built up our merchant marine in those historic days—laws that placed our flag on the high seas and gave us nine-tenths of our entire over-seas carrying trade. It is a simple matter, and would be done but for the influence of special interests and the tenacious power of monopoly.

Now, sir, I have introduced in several Congresses bills to accomplish this—not subsidy bills, not bills that rob the many for the benefit of the few—not bills that take money out of the pockets of the taxpayers generally and hand the money over specifically to special interests—but bills along intelligent businesslike lines, and in accordance with the policy of the fathers of the Republic and the framers of our Constitution who understood this subject of over-seas shipping trade and commerce and legislated accordingly, and the United States had in those days the finest merchant marine the world had ever seen. If we had continued the policy of the fathers we would to-day be the greatest maritime nation in the world and our flag would be on every sea, and our ships would be carrying the commerce not alone of our own country but perhaps half of that of all the other great nations of the world.

I introduced at the beginning of this Congress a bill to accomplish this (H. R. 8767), but it has been sleeping the sleep that never awakes in the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It will never come out. It will never be reported, simply because it is an honest bill and not a subsidy bill, because it does not rob the many for the benefit of the few, because it will accomplish practically all the people of the country desire—the building up of our merchant marine upon legitimate lines, in a business way, and the restoration of the American flag to the high seas.

My bill is a tonnage-tax bill along discriminating lines in favor of American-built ships and against foreign-built ships—and the foreigner pays the tonnage tax. In other words, the essential difference between my ship tonnage-tax bill and the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill is that the Gallinger subsidy bill compels the American people to give a bonus, or a subsidy, or a subvention—and they are all the same—to the American shipowner, while my bill makes the foreign shipowner pay an additional tonnage tax on goods, wares, and merchandise brought into this country in foreign bottoms. This bill of mine is a most comprehensive measure, covering every phase of this question, and in the judgment of those who know most about the matter it would effectually solve the problem without taking a single dollar from the pockets of the taxpayers of our country. I send this bill of mine to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time. I want the bill to go into the RECORD, so that those interested in this subject can read it and judge for themselves.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to regulate commerce with foreign nations; to make preference for the use of American freighting vessels; to extend the postal service by American steamships, and to promote American trade.

Be it enacted, etc., That the law relating to vessels, to the duties of tonnage, and to the ocean mail service in force when this act shall be approved be, and the same is hereby, supplemented and amended, as follows:

PART 1. TONNAGE DUTIES.

SECTION 1. That a discriminating tonnage duty based upon the gross admeasurement, in addition to the regular duty imposed on vessel tonnage by law, shall be levied and collected from all vessels not of the United States that shall arrive with merchandise, passengers, or mails to be landed in the United States from countries, colonies, or possessions where the said cargo, in whole or in part, was laden, to which said vessels do not belong, as follows:

Clause 1. On all vessels not exceeding 5,000 tons the additional duty shall be $1.25 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1909, after which date it shall be $1.50 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1911, after which date it shall be $2 per ton on the gross admeasurement.

Clause 2. On all vessels between the sizes of 5,000 and 10,000 tons the additional duty shall be $1.50 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1909, afted which date it shall be $2 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1911, after which date it shall be $2.50 per ton on the gross admeasurement.

Clause 3. On all vessels between the sizes of 10,000 and 15,000 tons the additional duty shall be $2 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1909, after which date it shall be $2.50 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1911, after which date it shall be $3 per ton on the gross admeasurement.

Clause 4. On all vessels exceeding the size of 15,000 tons the additional duty shall be $3 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1909, after which date it shall be $3.50 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1911, after which date it shall be $4 per ton on the gross admeasurement. Any vessel violating this section or refusing to pay duties as aforesaid shall not be permitted by the collector to load cargo in a port of the United States.

SEC. 2. That a duty of $1 per ton on the gross admeasurement, in addition to the regular duty imposed on tonnage by law, shall be levied and collected from every vessel not of the United States that shall arrive in ballast or without merchandise, mails, or passengers to be landed in the United States from a country, its colony or possession, to which said vessel does not belong, if it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the collector that no bounty, subsidy, or subvention of any sort from its Government has been promised, earned, or will be received in consideration of making such voyage; but in case such voyage to the United States has been made with the understanding and expectation on the part of owners, arising from law or agreement, that bounty, subsidy, or subvention of some sort will be earned or received in consideration of said voyage, then, and in that case, the duty aforesaid shall be at the rate of $2 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1909, after which date the additional duty aforesaid shall be at the rate of $2.50 per ton until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1911, after which date the additional duty shall be at the rate of $3 per ton of gross admeasurement. Any vessel violating this section or refusing to pay duties as aforesaid shall not be permitted by the collector to load cargo in a port of the United States.

SEC. 3. That a duty of 50 cents per ton on the gross admeasurement, in addition to the regular duty imposed by law, shall be levied and collected from every vessel not of the United States that shall arrive in ballast or with merchandise or passengers in a proportion less than one-fourth of her capacity for the same from the country, its colony or possession, to which said vessel or vessels may belong. But no vessel coming direct from her own country, its colony or possession, with merchandise or passengers in excess of one-fourth of her capacity for the same to be landed in the United States, shall be charged with an additional or extra tonnage duty, except in cases where the country from which she comes direct charges an additional or extra tonnage duty to vessels of the United States; and in all such cases, if there be any, the extra duty per ton of the vessel's country shall be added to the extra duty per ton of the United States, and the sum so found shall be the full charge per ton for additional or extra duty to be collected; or unless the country from which such vessel so laden or coming direct shall hold out to its vessels by law the payment of bounty, subsidy, or subvention of some sort in consideration of making voyages like the one in question, in which case three-fourths of the amount of the gratuity as aforesaid shall be charged and collected as countervailing duty in addition to the regular and extra duty otherwise chargeable and to be collected. Surveyors of tonnage shall certify to the collector the proportion of carrying capacity occupied by passengers, by freight, and by ballast, respectively.

SEC. 4. That a duty of $2.50 per ton on the gross admeasurement, in addition to the regular duty imposed on tonnage by law, shall be levied and collected from every vessel not of the United States that shall arrive from a country not its own, whether with or without cargo, but under engagement to load for another country than its own, or that shall effect such engagement after arrival at a time and while there shall be one or more vessels of American registry in port listed at the custom-house as ready and offering to engage for the same or a similar voyage, until the 1st day of January, A. D. 1909, after which date the duty aforesaid shall be at the rate of $3 per ton; but if there be not such vessel or vessels so listed at the time of arrival or of engagement in port, then tonnage duty shall be payable under section 1 or section 2; but if in addition to coming as aforesaid under engagement or making it after arrival as above, a foreign vessel shall have held out to her by law the payment of bounty, subsidy, or subvention of some sort in consideration of making voyages like the one in question, then, and in such cases, a duty of $4 per ton additional to the regular duty shall be levied and collected. And vessels of foreign register running under bounty, subsidy, or subvention by law of their country arriving at the Gulf ports of the United States from the Atlantic ports, or vice versa; or arriving at the Pacific ports of the United States from the Atlantic or Gulf ports, or vice versa; or arriving at any port of the mainland of the United States from any part of the insular possessions of the United States, or vice versa, in ballast, seeking cargo, shall pay additional tonnage duties as follows: On arrival from Atlantic to Gulf ports, or vice versa, $1 per ton; on arrival from Atlantic or Gulf ports to Pacific ports, or vice versa, $2 per ton; on arrival from any port of the mainland to any port of the insular possessions of the United States, or vice versa, $3 per ton. No foreign vessel shall take in cargo without a permit. Any vessel violating this section or refusing to pay duties as aforesaid shall not be permitted by the collector to load cargo in a port of the United States.

SEC. 5. That a tonnage duty of $1 per ton on the gross admeasurement, in addition to the regular duty imposed on tonnage by law, shall be levied and collected from every vessel that shall enter a port of the United States from a port of her own country, either with or without cargo, passengers, or mails, if she has called or stopped on the way at a port of a country not her own and there received merchandise, passengers, or mails to be landed in the United States, unless said vessel has been built in the United States or is owned by citizens of the United States to the extent of 40 per cent, to be proved to the satisfaction of the collector and the district attorney of any United States court.

SEC. 6. That a tonnage duty, to be termed light tax, of 5 cents per ton on the gross admeasurement of every merchant vessel, not of the United States, that shall enter a port of the United States, shall be levied and collected, in addition to the duties required by preceding sections, before clearance for sea, except in case such vessel shall clear in ballast or may have made port in distress, or was built in the United States.

SEC. 7. That a tonnage duty, to be termed race tax, of 4 cents per ton, on the gross admeasurement of every merchant vessel not of the United States that shall enter a port of the United States and there discharge merchandise, passengers, or mails, shall be levied and collected, in addition to the duties required by preceding sections, if said vessel shall be manned to an extent exceeding 10 per cent of the crew by persons belonging to a different race of men from the owners of said vessel. The regular tonnage tax to be paid by all vessels in the foreign trade shall be collected hereafter on every entry; the said tax shall be computed on the gross admeasurement, and the rates shall be increased from 6 cents to 10 cents and from 3 cents to 5 cents, respectively. American mail steamers shall pay tonnage tax but once a year.

PART 2. EXPORT PREMIUMS.

SEC. 8. That all collections of tonnage duties and charges against vessels of every kind, whether regular or additional, light, race, and passenger tax, entrance and clearance fees provided by this and former acts to be levied, collected, and paid at the custom-house, and all fines, penalties and forfeitures paid into the courts from violations of the navigation laws of the United States, this act included, shall, after the passage of this act, be set apart in the Treasury as a special fund from which to pay, first, for the support of marine hospitals for American seamen in the foreign trade; and, second, for the payment of premiums to exporters of merchandise for giving preference in the employment of vessels to those of the United States not in fact owned by themselves.

SEC. 9. That on and after thirteen months from the passage of this act there shall be paid, out of the special export fund in the Treasury provided for by section 8 of this act, to the bona fide owners and exporters of merchandise, the growth, production, and manufacture of the United States, to foreign countries not adjoining the United States, in vessels of the United States, registered pursuant to law, and not owned in fact by themselves, as follows: A premium of one-fourth of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 65 miles from the tidal boundary of the mainland of the United States; and a premium of one-half of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 400 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 1,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 1½ per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 2,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 2 per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port, not less than 3,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 2½ per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 4,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States; and a premium of 2¾ per cent on the cash valuation of each shipment direct to a port not less than 5,000 miles from the port of departure in the United States, which premium shall be the highest paid whatever the distance in excess of 5,000 miles, and such premiums to an exporter shall be payable to his order upon report of the clearance of the vessel, with a statement of the collector of the port fixing the value of the shipment, which must be sworn to by an appraiser for the United States, within ten days, according to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, distances between ports to be determined by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and stated in sea miles.

PART 3. MAIL CARRIAGE.

SEC. 10. That the postal act, approved March 3, 1891, be, and it is hereby, amended to provide and to read as follows:

Clause 1. The Postmaster-General shall, as often as once in each year, advertise for informal proposals for the carriage of mails by sea in American vessels between such ports of our own and other countries as to exporters may seem advantageous. The advertisements shall be inserted four times weekly in a paper printed in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, Galveston, Norfolk, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle, describing the service as that of mail and naval vessels adapted to promote the postal, commercial, and naval interests of the United States, and to subserve those of their owners as well. Proposers will state the size and speed of vessels, number of trips yearly, remuneration required, time when service could be begun, and such other particulars as may seem useful for the Government to consider.

Clause 2. Within one month after receipt of informal proposals the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster-General shall together consider their contents, the wants of the Navy, and the needs of the Post-Office, and fix upon a schedule of requirements that will satisfy both services. The Secretary of the Navy will control the plans for the vessels and the Postmaster-General will decide upon the postal programme, and the two together shall advertise formally to let contracts for the running of the vessels required. Such advertisements shall be inserted in the same papers that called for informal proposals four times weekly, describing the route, the character of the vessels, the size and speed, the number of trips yearly, the times of sailing, and the time when the service shall begin. The letting of such contracts shall be the same as prescribed by law for the letting of inland mail contracts so far as shall be applicable to vessels. Every contract must have the approval of the President, and none shall exceed the limit of thirty years; but the President may require improved service every ten years.

Clause 3. The vessels employed under this act shall be commanded by citizens, and at least two officers and two engineers of each vessel shall also be citizens of the United States; and on each departure a portion of the crew, inclusive of firemen, shall owe allegiance to the United States, to wit: During the first year, one-eighth thereof; during the next two years, one-fifth; during the fourth and fifth years, one-fourth; during the sixth and seventh years, three-tenths; during the remainder of contract time, one-third thereof. But no mail carrier shall be delayed in sailing to obtain a crew in above proportion. It may be stipulated that mails may be brought from abroad, the foreign country paying for the service; also that passengers and baggage and freight may be carried both ways. After January 1, 1908, the mails shall be sent foreign by vessels of the United States, and no others, without express consent of Congress; and in cases of need, when private enterprise fails to undertake or carry on the service at reasonable or lawful rates of remuneration, the Secretary of the Navy shall have authority, and it shall be his duty to furnish suitable vessels of the Navy in which to send mails foreign or bring them home, until the further order of Congress.

Clause 4. That all vessels in the postal service and hereafter built for it shall be prepared to receive arms for immediate use as cruisers, scouts, or transports in time of war; and in future their plans and specifications shall be agreed upon by and between the owners and the Secretary of the Navy, the strength and stability to be sufficient to carry armament most useful in naval service, and the materials of hull and machinery to be such as will command the highest classification given by American inspection and rating. And all such vessels hereafter built shall be constructed under the inspection of a naval officer detailed by the Secretary of the Navy, to whom he will report in writing the progress made monthly, whether or not the contract is being well performed, and when the trial trip may be made; and no vessel not approved by the Secretary as fulfilling the contract shall be accepted for the service.

Clause 5. The compensation to be agreed upon and paid for such service as may be contracted for under this act shall be reasonable and as low as responsible bidders will perform the same, having regard to the encouragement to vessels provided by this act, to the commercial circumstances in each case, and to the rate of compensation for similar service paid by other countries. Where a bid may be deemed too high, the programme may be modified or the route readvertised; payment for service to be made at the end of each round voyage. If the contract shall fail to be fulfilled for six months the President may declare it forfeited, and thereupon the route shall be readvertised and let to another bidder.

Clause 6. Upon each mail vessel the United States shall have transported, free of charge, one messenger, whose duty shall be to receive, sort, take in charge, and deliver the mails to and from the United States, and who shall be provided with suitable room for himself and for the mails.

Clause 7. Officers of the Navy may volunteer for service on said vessels, and when accepted by the contractors may be assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy whenever in his opinion such assignment can be made without harm to the service, and while in said employment they shall receive furlough pay from the Government and such other compensation from the contractors as may be agreed upon: Provided, That they shall be required to perform only such duties as pertain to the service.

Clause 8. Said vessels shall carry as cadets one American boy under 21 years of age for each 2,000 tons gross register, who shall be educated to the duties of the service as seamen, rank as petty officers, and receive reasonable remuneration.

Clause 9. Said vessels may be taken and used by the Government as cruisers, scouts, or transports at any time, on payment to the owners of their fair actual value at the time of the taking, and if there shall be a disagreement as to the value, then the same shall be settled by two appraisers, one appointed by each party, they selecting the third, who shall act in case the two shall fail to agree.

Clause 10. All vessels not of the United States coming with passengers from a country to which said vessels do not belong shall pay to the collector of the port an entrance tax of $20 for each and every passenger brought from such country who shall be landed, with his or her effects.

PART 4. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

SEC. 11. That marine underwriters or insurance companies belonging abroad, in person or through agencies in the ports of the United States, may issue policies, in conformity with State regulations, on shipments of goods, wares, and merchandise to be exported, but any discrimination made by them or their agents in the clauses of policies, in the premium rates, or effected through inspection of hulls or otherwise, which shall tend to favor the employment of foreign vessels, or tend to disfavor the engagement of vessels of the United States, shall be deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine as a penalty in a district court of the United States. Said fine for the first offense shall not exceed $5,000 nor be less than $3,000; for a second offense said fine shall be not less than $10,000, and for the third offense and each one afterwards said fine shall be not less than $15,000 nor more than $25,000, and suits shall be prosecuted by the attorney of the court aforesaid for each and every violation brought to his notice. In any such suit it shall be no defense that the orders or directions of any person, or the rules and regulations of any association of underwriters, shipowners, merchants, marine surveyors, or their agents, not citizens of the United States, or that the inspection or classification of any vessel by any person, society, or authority whatsoever, can be claimed to justify the discrimination that may have been the subject of complaint. In a time of peace it shall not be lawful for any officer of the Government to receive tenders of service to be performed by vessels not of the United States, and in all contracts for the performance of public work it must be provided that transportation shall be performed by vessels of the United States.

SEC. 12. That on and after the passage of this act it shall be lawful for the space of thirty months, but no longer, for any bona fide citizen, citizens, or domestic corporation engaged in, or intending immediately to engage in, the carriage of merchandise, mails, or passengers in the foreign trade of the United States, to import and enter at the custom-house, for his or their own use, and no other, in said trade, but not to be held for sale or sold to others, and not to be employed in the domestic trade more than two months in the year, any vessel or vessels suitable therefor, of size not less than 2,000 tons gross and of age not more than 5 years, and have the same duly registered as a vessel or vessels of the United States, but upon the following conditions, nevertheless, to wit, that all vessels imported in the first six months of the term of thirty months as aforesaid shall pay a duty of $4 per gross ton; those imported in the second six months shall pay a duty of $5 per gross ton; those imported in the third six months shall pay a duty of $6 per gross ton; those imported in the fourth six months shall pay a duty of $7 per gross ton; those imported in the fifth six months shall pay a duty of $8 per gross ton measurement. The Treasury Department may allow credit on duties for imported tonnage to the extent of six and twelve months' time on secured notes of owners. And it shall be unlawful, upon penalty, as for a misdemeanor, punishable by fine of not exceeding $1,000 in a district court of the United States, for the master, owner, or agent of any foreign-built freighting vessel or yacht not duly registered, enrolled, or licensed to fly the flag of the Union from or abaft of the aftermost mast, spar, or pole, except as a sign of distress.

SEC. 13. That where it may become known to the collector that rebates of freight are paid in the commerce of any port of the United States, either by citizens or foreigners, he shall bring the facts to the attention of the United States district attorney, who shall bring suit to break up the practice. And for the prevention of frauds under this act, in indirect voyaging, foreign vessels not built in the country of registry shall undergo a probation of three years before being adjudged by the collector as belonging in good faith to the country of registration.

SEC. 14. That, coincident with the passage and approval of this act, section 4136 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall stand repealed, and it shall not be lawful longer for any officer of the Government to issue a register, enrollment, or license for any vessel built abroad except such as have been captured in war and condemned as prize, and such as have been forfeited for a violation of the laws and bought at public sale, or admitted by an act.

SEC. 15. That the regular duties of tonnage computed on the gross admeasurement shall be paid alike by American and foreign vessels on each and every arrival when entry of vessel is made. Entrance or passenger tax shall be paid when permit is given for the landing of passengers from vessels not of the United States brought from countries to which said vessels do not belong. All additional tonnage duties and the light and race tax to be paid before lading permit is issued, but if loading be delayed, then, at latest, at the end of two months from date or entrance. American vessels carrying crews of which one-eighth the number are citizens or owe allegiance to the United States shall have rebate of tonnage tax to the extent of 20 per cent; if one-fourth of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 30 per cent; if three-eighths of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 40 per cent; if one-half of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 50 per cent; if five-eighths of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 75 per cent; and if three-fourths of the crew be citizens, the rebate shall be 100 per cent. The United States shipping commissioner shall ascertain and certify to the collector the proportion of citizens in each crew where rebate of tax may be demanded. Regular apprentices as seamen or engineers, if citizens, shall count as men in computing rebate of tax. In trade to and from tropical countries, where it may not be practicable to find any but natives of such regions to man American vessels, permits may be issued on applications under oath of the owner or agent by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for one year, or while necessary, to carry a crew such as it may be practicable to engage in any given place. In all cases where vessels may be fined for infractions of law in accordance with the statutes it shall be unlawful for the Secretary of the Treasury or other Department to remit any portion thereof without an order of court; and it shall also be unlawful for the Commissioner of Navigation to order refunds of tonnage taxes that have been paid to a collector without an order of court.

SEC. 16. That sections 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 16 of this act shall take effect upon its passage, and sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, and 15 in one year and thirty days thereafter; and all acts or provisions of law in conflict herewith are hereby repealed; also any and all articles or clauses in existing conventions or treaties in contravention herewith are hereby annulled and abrogated, in conformity with the stipulations and equities of said agreements and the rights of the United States; and the formal notice of the Congress of the United States is hereby given that in one year from the approval of this act all convention or treaty stipulations for the suspension of discriminating duties under the aforesaid agreements are receded from on the part of the United States, and all enactments therefor are by this act repealed.

Mr. SULZER. Now, Mr. Chairman, that bill speaks for itself, and I have had it read at the Clerk's desk for the purpose of getting it in the RECORD, so that the people who are interested in this great shipping question can read the bill and judge accordingly. I place this tonnage-tax bill by the side of the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill and submit the merits of the two measures to the impartial judgment of the taxpayers of the country, confident that the general principles of my bill will be accepted by them in preference to those of the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill. My bill is a practicable, honest, businesslike measure, and, in the opinion of those most competent to testify regarding this matter, its enactment into law will go far to solve the shipping problem, restore our merchant marine, place our flag on the high seas, and give us at least nine-tenths of our ocean-going commerce. There is a difference as wide as the poles between the principle of my bill and the principle of the Gallinger bill. My bill is a tonnage-tax bill, and the foreigner pays the tax. In other words, all goods brought to this country in foreign bottoms would have to pay a tonnage tax on the ship's gross admeasurement. This being the case, foreign shipowners would have to charge higher freight rates than American shipowners, with the consequence that the American shipowners would get all the ocean-carrying trade. This would create a demand for American-built ships, and the demand would revive our languishing shipbuilding industries and the revival of those industries would give employment to thousands and thousands of workmen on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Of course no foreign shipowner will commend my bill. No subsidy grabber advocates it. No shipowners' trust favors it. No marine monopoly likes it. Naturally every foreign shipowner is absolutely opposed to it, because every foreign shipowner knows that if a bill like this should become a law in this country in less than ten years the United States would be the mistress of the seas and do the major part of the deep-sea carrying trade of the world. I do not expect foreign shipowners to favor my bill, but I know when the question is understood by the taxpayers of our country every patriotic American will be in favor of my bill in preference to the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill, which takes money out of the pockets of the people of this country and pays it over in the nature of a gratuity to a special business interest. There is no graft in my bill; no private gain at public expense; it is just a plain, simple, practical, business, maritime measure for a tax on the tonnage of the gross admeasurement of foreign ships.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know we all realize that there is a strong feeling throughout the country in favor of the rehabilitation of our merchant marine. This is a patriotic sentiment, eminently proper, and should be encouraged by every true American. It is unfortunate, however, that a great many well-meaning citizens, who desire to see our ocean carrying trade restored, have little knowledge of the causes which drove our shipping from the high seas and placed us at the bottom of the list of the world's maritime powers; and consequently the noisy subsidy boomers, knowing they are sure to get all the benefits, are having everything down here pretty much their own way.

There are a great many people who have an idea that the civil war was responsible for the destruction of our ocean commerce, but this is not true, because between 1865 and 1875 the statistics show that about 63 per cent of American imports and exports were carried in American bottoms. Our registered tonnage in 1861 stood at 2,496,000, and to-day it is less than 800,000. Deep-seated economic conditions, together with barbaric navigation laws, are really responsible for our deplorable maritime condition and have done more than all other agencies combined to deprive us of our rightful position in the ocean carrying trade of the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what shall we do to restore the American merchant marine? What shall we do to place our flag on every sea? What shall we do to regain our ocean carrying trade, and revive our ship-building industry? There are several policies, sir, advocated by those who desire to restore the American flag to the high seas and secure for our country its proper share of the world's ocean commerce; and succinctly enumerated, they are as follows:

First. Free ships, which means the right of an American citizen to build or buy a ship anywhere, give it the benefit of the American registry laws, and place upon it the American flag. This is the good old honest American plan. To bring this about all that is necessary is to repeal our antiquated prohibitive navigation laws, which are a blot on our maritime intelligence, and this will never be done while the Republicans can prevent it, because they believe it will be a death blow to their pet doctrine of protection. This policy of free ships has been advocated for years by a great many sincere and able and patriotic men who understand this shipping question thoroughly and deplore as much as any of us the loss we are sustaining every year by reason of the elimination of our merchant marine. As Senator NELSON said in the Senate just before the final vote on the Gallinger subsidy bill: "It is my opinion, and it is my honest opinion, that you can grant subsidies as much as you please, but you will never put our shipping on a par with other countries until you grant them that which every other maritime country has on the face of the earth, and that is free ships." Under our existing navigation laws the American who builds or buys a ship in a foreign country is an outlaw, prevented from giving the ship American registration, and compelled to sail the ship under the protection of a foreign flag. There are other objections urged, however, to free ships, tenable or untenable, and very briefly stated, these objections are that the American shipbuilder can not compete with the foreign shipbuilder; that the prices of labor and material are higher here than in foreign countries, and that if American capitalists had the right to build ships and buy ships in foreign countries and bring them here and register them under our laws it would close the shipyards of our country and force a great many workmen out of employment.

This proposition, however, is controverted, but I am frank to say there is reliable testimony regarding it sustaining both sides. I have not the time in the hour at my disposal to go into details, as I should like to do. Suffice it for me to say now that I know it has been stated that ships can be built cheaper abroad than at home, but the statement loses much of its force when we realize that we have the greatest shipyards on earth, and can build battle ships and cruisers as quick and as cheap as any other country in the world. They say that it costs more for ship material here than it does abroad. If this is so, then the trust manufacturers of steel and iron are selling their manufactured products cheaper abroad than they are here, and if such is the fact, it seems to me to be the immediate duty of Congress to legislate so that the trust manufacturers of ship material for our shipyards shall sell to American purchasers just as cheap as they sell to foreign purchasers. They say that wages are higher here than they are abroad. This may be so in some instances, but if it is so I undertake to affirm that the reason is because American skilled mechanics are better and more efficient workmen and perform more work in a given time than foreign workmen. There are no tariff barriers against the importation of foreign workmen to compete with American workmen, and if American shipbuilders were paying so much more to their workmen than foreign shipbuilders, what is to prevent the workmen of foreign shipbuilders from coming to this country and working in American shipyards? There is no law to prevent it. Labor, skilled and unskilled, comes into this country free, while the necessaries of life that labor must buy are brought in under a heavy tax, and the consumer pays the tax. This is the argument pro and con, and those interested can pursue it to its logical conclusion. All I have time to say further regarding free ships is that efforts have been made for years in Congress to secure free ships, but without avail, and I believe at the present time it is absolutely impossible to pass a free-ship law. But before I leave this phase of the subject I want to say that I am a friend of organized labor, first, last, and all the time—and if I thought free ships would injure the rights and interests of the workingman of our country, I do not hesitate to say that I would be for the rights of labor first and the policy of ships afterwards. So much for free ships, and we will now consider the next plan.

Second. Ship subsidies, in accordance with the provisions of the Gallinger ship-subsidy bill. This plan, however, meets with much adverse criticism from those who are opposed to taking money out of the Treasury of the Government to aid any special line of business, and the principle is radically wrong and undeniably untenable. Democrats are absolutely opposed to ship subsidies or bounties or gratuities, because it is a scheme that robs the many for the benefit of the few, because it is trust favoritism, rank class legislation, and a policy of doubtful constitutionality. I do not believe it ever was intended by the framers of our Constitution that taxes should be levied on all the people to aid any special class of people, and the policy of our Government has always been adverse to ship subsidies of any kind. All recent efforts along this line have failed, and I believe they will fail now and in the future. Whenever the Government puts its hand in one man's pocket and takes a dollar from that man and gives it to another man, the Government is guilty of larceny.

The cohorts of ship subsidies who want to pilfer the people know that their scheme is contrary to the spirit of our institutions and can not be justified under our system of government. They do not attempt to justify it, but make flamboyant speeches about the glory of the flag, the deplorable condition of our merchant marine, and the great financial loss we are sustaining every year in our ocean carrying trade. But I can not bring my mind to believe that the House of Representatives will be so recreant to its duty as to pass a subsidy bill, and I will take up the next plan suggested—that of discriminating duties.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I should like to ask the gentleman how discriminating duties will help us on the Pacific coast? Take it at Puget Sound to illustrate. Forty-seven per cent of our imports are already on the free list. I had a calculation made, taking the Boston Steamship Company's larger vessels, of 10,000 tons each, as to how much it would benefit them to have a discriminating duty of 10 per cent in their favor on the imports that they brought into Puget Sound; and this calculation, according to mathematics, showed that one of these great steamers of 10,000 tons each would be benefited just $70 for a 6,000-mile trip.

Mr. SULZER. Benefited just $70 on what?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Seventy dollars by a 10 per cent discriminating duty on the imports brought in at one trip; in other words, giving them the advantage of a 10 per cent discriminating duty, dividing it among the vessels, it would amount to $70 a trip for a 6,000-mile trip of one of those steamers.

Mr. SULZER. I assume the ship the gentleman refers to a cargo of tea carried from Yokohama to Seattle, and tea is not now taxed, and the tea coming in free of duty, the ship, of course, carrying a cargo of nondutiable goods, under a discriminating duty would not receive much advantage. But the ship gets no advantage under the law now, and there are not many articles on the free list under the present tariff laws—and not likely to be for some time to come. But let me call the gentleman's attention to his party's platform——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I want information.

Mr. SULZER. Very well, the gentleman shall have all the information I can give in regard to discriminating duties. I want to call the attention of the House to the Republican national platform of 1896. I read from it, as follows: "We favor the early American policy of discriminating duties for the upbuilding of our merchant marine."

And now, if the gentleman will allow me, I shall briefly discuss this plan for the upbuilding of our merchant marine.

Third. Discriminating duties in favor of American vessels built in American shipyards. This was practically the policy in vogue in this country up to 1828, when, to please some foreign interests, the law was repealed, and from that day to this our prestige on the high seas has been declining until it is less to-day that it was a century ago. Many disinterested friends of our merchant marine believe that if this policy of the fathers was restored to-day it would revive our over-seas carrying trade and in a very few years build up our shipping industries so that we would secure our share of the ocean commerce of the world and save millions and millions of dollars that we now pay annually to foreign shipowners. In reading over the report of the Merchant Marine Commission, I observe that several large shipbuilders and shipowners testified that they formerly believed in subsidies, but had changed their opinions and now believed in and preferred discriminating duties. There seems to be only one objection, so far as I can learn, to a return to discriminating duties, and this objection comes from the advocates of ship subsidies, who declare that we have about thirty commercial treaties with foreign governments containing the favored-nation clause, and in order to inaugurate the policy of discriminating duties it will be necessary to change our commercial treaties, and this can not be done without giving these favored nations one year's notice. However, there is no doubt the change could be made if this Government wanted to make it, and a year's notice to bring it about would cause no great delay, especially when we consider that the subsidies granted under the Gallinger bill do not begin until after July, 1907. If we desire to change our commercial treaties with these favored nations, we have a perfect right to do so and no nation can object, and I do not think that any of the nations would retaliate. Besides, if there is to be retaliation, two can play at the same game, and our trade is more important to other nations than their trade is to our country. Many citizens and several distinguished Members of Congress who have given this subject much thought and consideration believe that discriminating duties will effectually solve the problem in the most feasible and practicable way, and heretofore this has been the plan of the Republicans as outlined in their several platforms, especially in the platform of 1896, and President McKinley, in his letter of acceptance, said: "We must encourage our merchant marine; we must have more ships; they must be manned by and owned by Americans. The policy of discriminating duties in favor of our shipping which prevailed in the early days of our history should be again promptly adopted by Congress and vigorously supported until our prestige and supremacy on the seas are fully attained."

The leading Republicans of the country, in Congress and out of Congress, adhered tenaciously to this policy of discriminating duties until Mr. Hanna introduced in the Fifty-sixth Congress his ship-subsidy bill, and since then the Republican platforms have dodged the subject, and Republican leaders have been divided, some favoring subsidies, some tonnage taxes, and some discriminating duties. I now come to the next plan.

Fourth. Tonnage taxes on gross admeasurement by way of discrimination in favor of American-built ships, owned by Americans, flying the Stars and Stripes, and against foreign-built ships sailing under foreign flags. In this case the foreign shipowner would have to pay this tonnage tax on the gross admeasurement of his ship, and of course he would have to charge freight rates high enough to cover this tax, and the consequence would be that foreign exporters would send their goods to this country in American ships and bring their imports home in American ships. This would create an immediate demand for American ships and speedily revive our shipbuilding industries on our Atlantic and Pacific coasts. In some respects tonnage taxes and discriminating duties are similar, but in my opinion tonnage taxes are less complicated than discriminating duties and will more speedily bring about the desired result. In several previous Congresses I introduced a shipping bill on the lines of discriminating duties. The bill was always referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, because it related to the revenue, and I was never able to get it reported, so I made up my mind that the Republican leaders in the House of Representatives were not in favor of discriminating duties and would never pass a discriminating-duty bill to revive our merchant marine and secure for our country its share of the world's over-seas carrying trade. I therefore introduced at the beginning of this session of Congress a bill for tonnage taxes on the gross admeasurement of the foreign ships, and this bill, not being a bill affecting the revenue, was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, over which the gentleman from Ohio presides.

This bill has met with much favor from people opposed to subsidies and who want to see Congress do something to revive our merchant marine. This bill of mine is a tonnage-tax bill and nothing more. It is not a subsidy bill nor a free-ship bill nor a discriminating-duty bill, and under its provisions it would not take one dollar out of the Treasury of the Government or out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the country. It makes the foreigner pay the tax, and this ought not to be objectionable to the Republicans, because up to very recently they claimed that under the protective tariff the foreigner paid the tax, but I understand they have abandoned that absurd claim, and now admit that the consumer pays the tax. This tonnage tax on the gross admeasurement of foreign ships in favor of American ships is, I believe, substantially in line with the policy of the men who molded our legislative marine history in the early days of the Republic. The bill is indorsed by the American Shipping Society of the United States, of which Hon. W. W. Bates, of Denver, Colo.—formerly United States shipping commissioner—is president, and has been approved by some of the ablest writers and thinkers and political economists in our land. It is a comprehensive bill, but when studied its provisions are very simple, and those who know most about the subject affirm that if this bill were enacted into law it would solve our maritime problem, restore our merchant marine, build up our shipyard industries, place our flag on ships on every sea, and give us a great auxiliary navy in case of foreign complications; and it would accomplish all of this without doing violence to any of the principles of our Government or taking one dollar out of the Treasury or the pockets of the people.

The bill may not be perfect, and if it is not, I shall be glad to do my share to perfect it; but I believe, from a careful study of all bills that have been offered on this subject in Congress for the past ten years, that my bill presents the most speedy and effective remedy. I know it is said by the friends of the shipping trust, and the advocates of subsidies, that the bill discriminates in favor of American ships against foreign ships; but I reply that we never can build up our shipping industries and restore our merchant marine unless we adopt the policy of free ships, or a policy that will discriminate in some way in favor of our own ships and against foreign ships. The fact is that we discriminate now against our own ships in favor of foreign ships. My bill simply reverses the situation. I sincerely believe that if this bill, or one similar to it, containing substantially its provisions, should be enacted into law, that the United States in a few years would become mistress of the seas, and American ships, built in our own shipyards, would do all of our own ocean commerce besides a great part of the deep-sea carrying trade of the other countries of the world.

Mr. Chairman, I see my time is nearly consumed and I must conclude; and in doing so I want to say that my bill is not a makeshift. It is not a temporary expedient. It is a permanent remedy, and once adopted and upon the statute books it would continue in favor for years and years to come, until the American people possessed the greatest merchant marine in all the world; and I therefore say in conclusion that from a careful study of the whole subject-matter I sincerely believe that the adoption of this bill, in my opinion, will speedily restore our ocean carrying trade, revive our shipbuilding industries, give employment in our shipyards to thousands and thousands of men in all parts of the country, bring about an era of prosperity such as we have never known before in our shipping trade and deep-sea commerce, place our flag on ships on every ocean and in every port, and make the American sailor what he was in the historic days of the Republic—the pride of the people, the master of the seas, and the arbiter of the ocean highways of the world. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to talk about free seeds, although I am in favor of them. I think this Government is getting very economical at the little end of the horn, but there is another matter about which they are getting extremely economical, that is very practical, and that I am confident will come home, if the policy is pursued, to some of my Republican brethren as well as to some of my Democratic brethren, and that there will be some vacant seats on both sides of the House if it is not discontinued. I have reference to a recently adopted policy of the Post-Office Department with reference to rural service. The Department in the past has been fairly liberal in the establishment of rural service. It is acting now just about as far the other way in disestablishing it and preventing it. A certain number of prescribed boxes must now be bought and put up before the Department will order the service established.

Heretofore after inspection by the special agent the number of families were ascertained and the service put in and time given in which to buy and put up the regulation boxes, but now the special agent goes over the route, ascertains the number of families, and orders it put in and the service held up until the regulation-approved boxes are first purchased and put up.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If my friend will permit me, I will state the same rule applies to all post-office boxes. They have to be approved. General uniformity is what they are after.

Mr. SIMS. I am going to talk about uniformity, and that uniformity is going to vex somebody on that side as well as on this. Why is it that the patron of the rural route, whose box stands right in front of his door, can not for himself determine what kind of a box and out of what material and who shall make it in which he receives his mail after it is deposited there and the Government has no further responsibility?

Why is it, I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH], because he is a very representative gentleman of this House, and it looks like he is determined to leave us and go to the Senate, which will be our loss—why is it that the Government must say what kind of a box your mail shall be put in? In the rural service, where the rural carrier is paid $720 a year to carry the mail, we must have uniformity, when right by the same box in which the rural carrier delivers the mail is a box put up in which the star-route carrier delivers mail, and that may be any kind of a box that the patron sees proper with which to provide himself.

Mr. WEBB. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. WEBB. Do you know anything as to the enormous profits that are being made out of the sale of these regulation rural boxes?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know, but I have a suspicion, and I think a well-grounded suspicion, that there is a good profit, a very good profit, to the men who manufacture and sell them, and a good profit to the steel manufacturers who prepare the material from which they are made, so commonly called the "steel trust." But here is the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, with as large experience as the Fourth Assistant, and he says to the star-route carrier, "Put the mail in the box that the patron prepares and puts up himself." That is a part of the Department of the Government; and the Second Assistant, with the same character of mail, valued just the same to the man who receives it, says the farmer can make his own box or get a carpenter near him to make it, or get his own tinner in his own town to make it, and the mail is put in that box.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I think that is proper, and he ought to have that privilege, and——

Mr. SIMS. I know you could not think otherwise; you have too much common sense, too good a heart, to indorse this arbitrary method of the Fourth Assistant that says he must prescribe the kind of property you must put up and use yourself, and the material with which even the boxes themselves are manufactured, which is made by one of the worst and most gigantic trusts that ever flourished in any country.

I am not here charging that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and his Department are intending to benefit the manufacturers of iron and steel, the material of which these particular boxes are made, but I am here to say they are men of common sense, and we presume every intelligent man intends the natural result following his act. I want to show how this thing is going on. The people have resented this idea of having to buy the regulation boxes, and on many routes that have been established they have not bought the number of boxes the Department wanted them to buy from these enormously profitable private sources, and now what are they doing? Discontinuing the service, reducing it to three times a week where it was daily, because, by the arbitrary, tyrannical, and unjust requirements of the Department, that benefits nobody but the men or corporations who manufacture the material of which the boxes are composed, the service is held up, with no law to authorize it but a post-office regulation, until 75 per cent of the patrons purchase the boxes so foolishly, unjustly, and unnecessarily required of them.

Now, let me tell you of an actual case in point. From my little town of Linden, Tenn., there is a rural free-delivery route from Linden going west toward Perryville. Going right up by and over the same road from Perryville is a star route, and there stands to-day on that road a rural route box put up under the regulation requiring steel or iron (trust-made products), right by the side of which stands a wooden box made by the farmer, in which the United States star-route mail carrier deposits the mail just the same as the rural carrier does in the other. It is just as reasonable, just as necessary that the mail should be adequately protected in one box as in the other. The order for a box in each case emanates from the same Department. I say that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General is a patriot and a man of common sense, a friend of the people, and not their oppressor, but the action of the Fourth Assistant that requires a man to put up a certain kind of box to receive his own mail in is a friend of the manufacturer of that character of box, is an oppressor of the people, who resent being dictated to as to how they shall receive that which is their own.

I suppose it will not be very long until the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General will say: "You shall not open your letters unless you do it by using a certain kind of approved opener." He is invading the rights and privileges of the private citizen for the benefit of a trust-manufactured material and we tamely submit to it, surrendering our liberties one at a time. That is what we are coming to. That is what is being done. No longer than yesterday I received a letter about a route just inspected where there are 114 families on the route, and the order is made that it go into operation, provided 75 per cent of these people first buy these trust-manufactured boxes and put them up before they get the service, and all this with no law of Congress behind it; nothing but the tyrannous regulation of the Department depriving the people of what is right and just and what Congress intended they should have.

Why should we extend the rigorous criminal laws of the United States and rigorous criminal penalties to protect this trust-made box?

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a suggestion?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON. I spent three months last summer in going all over the rural routes in my district with the carriers, and in nineteen cases out of twenty somebody stood on the side of the route to get the mail, and the carrier never had to open a box.

Mr. SIMS. Why, the gentleman from South Carolina has suggested that which is within the knowledge of every man who knows anything about it, except the Department, that we would presume should know something about it, but seems to be groping in darkness. In nine cases out of ten, unless the weather is bad, there stands a little boy or a little girl, the wife of the farmer or the farmer himself, or somebody beside the road and gets the mail before the carrier has a chance to put it in the box. Yet they are telling us, "You shall not receive this mail unless you put in this trust-manufactured box." You can not put in the box made by the carpenter next door, or made by the farmer himself, or the village tinner, because a Government official forsooth has not stamped on it "approved."

Where are the liberties of the private citizen going if we are to submit to such tyranny as this, while on a star route the mail carrier puts the mail in a box that is prepared by the patron himself?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How do you know there is a trust making these boxes?

Mr. SIMS. Who makes nearly all the steel, iron, and tin? And there is very little that is manufactured of any one of those articles that is not in a trust. Why should the criminal laws be applied to these boxes? No registered letter can be put in them, no pension letter can be put into them, but if it is maliciously destroyed or mutilated it is a high crime and misdemeanor against the United States. It is right to have criminal-law protection against malicious destruction or damage of these boxes, but let the State furnish it. The United States needs not to extend its criminal jurisdiction for the protection of these boxes. It is all right to extend it to the receiving boxes, to those boxes for which the Government is responsible after the mail is deposited in them, but when a patron puts his money in a box it is his own private property; if he is willing to take take the risk, let him take it. Let the States make the laws to punish those who damage these boxes, and let the boy or man, whoever he may be, be tried by a jury of the citizens of his own county.

Now, let me give you an example of the result of this glorious method of procedure. Three boys, one of them 15 years old, started from the county seat of a county in my district five years ago to attend an evening meeting. The younger boy was in advance of the others. They came along singing, whooping, and hallooing, as boys will. The younger boy with his riding switch struck a rural mail box to make a noise to cause the other boys' horses to dodge. It was a box of very poor quality, and it made a little dent, not as big as your finger. It did not damage the box at all. What was the result? It got talked about, and the postmaster was informed that he must report it to the Department at Washington.

Three long years after that occurred this 15-year-old boy, who has an invalid father, an invalid mother, and a sister whom he is trying to educate, had gone to the State of Texas, working there as a wage-earner. Three years after this thing occurred an inspector came down there to hunt up this thing. He sent for the two boys that were along and took their testimony or statements. He sent for the man who owned the box, and that man would not come. He cared nothing about it; no injury was really done him. The inspector sent back a most threatening message to come or he would apply the thumbscrews of Federal power to him. The poor man was dragged up there and made this statement in the post-office, with numbers of good Republican witnesses present. It was stated to this inspector that this boy did not hurt this box. The owner made no complaint. The father of the boy offered to buy a new box, and the owner said "I do not want it;" but this imperial inspector was sent out to find something, and he found it. He said there, in the presence of the postmaster, "If you lay the weight of your hand upon one of these boxes, you will be carried to court."

He made his report; it was sent to the United States district attorney at Memphis, and these witnesses were dragged to the Federal court. In the meantime the boy was in Texas trying to make an honest living. He was indicted for maliciously damaging a mail box. The parents of the boy are poor and unable to employ a lawyer. I went to see the district attorney. He said that his assistant handled the case. I talked to the assistant and he said, "Well, I came very near advising the grand jury to ignore the case, but there had been a number of complaints up there and we never could locate the individuals, and we thought we would indict this boy as an example to others." That is what happened about this trust-made box. That young man has to be dragged back from Texas, where he is at work making a modest but honest living, to be tried in the criminal court of the United States, when in the bottomless pit of hades no jury could be found mean enough to convict him. If it had been a wooden box made by this good farmer, in which he was willing to receive his mail, that boy would not be to-day bound over to a criminal court for doing that which he had no more idea was wrong than if he was an infant child, and did not even know what it was when he struck it. If the boy had done something wrong, and could have been tried in his own State court, there would not have been all this delay and injustice. Who wants to create Federal crimes for Federal courts to punish in such a way as this? The people would rather not have the service, if they have got to accept it under such tyrannous conditions as these.

I want to say to my friends over there, politically I am "agin" you, but I know many of you are as good men as there is to be found anywhere. You might not expect me to say that, but it is a fact; I know it by experience. Do you know that a great many intelligent people look to us as the author of this rural-route service, and that they will hold us responsible for its discontinuance? I will prove it to you. Out of one little town in my district there were three rural mail routes. Two of the routes were doing well, and the third one showed a poor return. One of these inspectors was sent down there and he made a report to discontinue route 3 absolutely, and, I think, was entirely justified in that. The people made no complaint; but he changed routes 1 and 2 to three times a week; then he took out the carrier from route 2 and put the carrier on route 1 to carry both routes. What was the matter with the carrier on route 2?

He has done nothing wrong; he has his horses, he has his hack, and on the 30th of April his route stops, when it is too late for that poor man to get land and plant a crop. With no notice, he is thrown out of his job. What for? To be economical, to make a showing that the Department is doing something on the side of retrenchment. When I asked over the telephone, a few hours ago, why didn't the Department let both carriers on these routes carry the mail, after reducing to three times a week, and thus reduce each man the same—each would have had something to help himself along the balance of the year—the reply was it was more economical for one carrier to carry both.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman is talking about rural carriers?

Mr. SIMS. Rural carriers. Now, I want to read to you a letter to show that the people down there do hold us responsible. I am not making a speech for buncombe. Let me read you a letter, a well-written letter, from a man who is no fool, although he is not fully informed, as to all the red-tape requirements that are enforced here against the plain people:

FINGER, TENN., April 2½, 1906.

Hon. T. W. SIMS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: About one year ago our mail route started with about 450 or 500 pieces of mail; this month it will be about 2,000 pieces. We are doing all we can to educate the people to the great benefit of the same. It seems now that our route (No. 2) is to be cut down to every other day, and we therefore beg earnestly of you to please continue our route every day, as we think it will be only a short time until we will have better than 3,000 pieces per month.

Mr. SIMS, we have stood by you in every race that you have made and expect to stay with you. We favored you when you needed help and will favor you this year when your reelection is certain, and now you have an opportunity to favor us. We think that if our route has grown from 500 to 2,000 in one year, and it the first year at that, that it is nothing but right for it to still continue every day.

I fully believe that it will increase at least 1,200 pieces this coming year. You will greatly favor your many friends here by coming to the rescue and giving us our route every day.

You know how inconvenient it would be to you to get your mail only every other day, and should we not feel as well?

I voice the sentiment of every true Democrat and every wide-awake Republican when I say that we ask of you to give us daily mail.

We thank you in advance for your kindness.

Your Democratic friend, J. T. ROBISON.

You see from this letter that we are to be held responsible for this tyrannous course pursued by the Department, without any statutory requirement for it. Here is another letter just like it, which I now read:

FINGER, TENN., April 23 1906.

Mr. T. W. SIMS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

KIND SIR AND FRIEND: I understand that rural free delivery No. 2 and No. 1 have been cut out one-half, and No. 3 cut out entirely April 30, 1906; Levi B. McIntyre, carrier of No. 2; Murry F. Walker, carrier of No. 1. Murry F. Walker has been selected to carry both routes (or mails). Mr. SIMS, we want route No. 2 put back to full time, and we want Levi B. McIntyre placed back carrier of route No. 2, as formerly. This rural free delivery justifies what we ask for. Here are some figures to show you that I am right in the matter. The inspector was here and inspected route No. 2 the latter part of February; Mr. McIntyre was carrying 1,000 pieces per month, with 30 boxes; through the month of March the people added to that number 57 boxes, with prospect of more, and carrier carried 2,000 pieces during March; rural free delivery No. 3 being killed will add five to six hundred more pieces to route No. 2. This rural free delivery passes through a good section of country, and they are good people, and have always been for you and are for you yet; with the reestablishing of the route to full time, and Levi B. McIntyre carrier, will still add voters to your list. Please see to this work promptly before the change comes, which will take place April 30, 1906. If you can do anything for this it will be appreciated.

Yours, truly, W. H. HARRIS.

It may be that I am the first gentleman that has received such letters, but they will come to more than to myself. Now, that identical section in McNary County, Tenn., is white; there are not a half a dozen negro families in it. Two-thirds of them are Republicans and never voted for me in their lives.

To show you what the people think, here is a petition signed by many names asking me to restore the service to six times a week. It is no use to read it; it is just like the letters in substance.

The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, with reference to these routes, says in his letter just received:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, April 26, 1906.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to your telephone message of to-day inquiring as to the reasons for discontinuance of rural route No. 3, Finger, Tenn., and the substitution of every-other-day service for daily service on routes 1 and 2, involving the discontinuance of the services of one of the carriers, I have to say that it appearing from the reports of the amount of mail handled on these routes that there was a lack of patronage, an inspection was made with a view to ascertaining the exact conditions.

As to route 1, it appears that, although the route had been in operation for almost two years, of the 110 families within the territory only seventy-five families are patronizing the service, using thirty-five boxes, and the amount of mail handled during the three months ended December 31, 1905, was 3,142 pieces, of all classes. On the average route throughout the country for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1905, the average number of pieces of mail handled per month was 3,688. It was not found practicable to rearrange the service so as to increase the patronage materially, because the adjacent territory is supplied by rural delivery from other points. A slight change was made in order to place the service nearer six families, in the hope that they might patronize it.

The same general conditions prevailed as to route No. 2. It is being patronized by 90 families out of 115, with 30 boxes in use, and the total number of pieces of mail handled during the three months ended December 31, 1905, was 3,955. It appearing from the patronage and the amount of mail handled that daily service is not appreciated in this territory, the Department feels that it is not warranted in continuing such service, and accordingly has ordered that these routes be operated every other day, the service being performed by one carrier.

As to route No. 3, it was found that this route, which was established September 1, 1905, has handled about 700 pieces of mail per month, the whole amount of mail handled during the three months ended December 31, 1905, being only 1,956 pieces. There are 26 boxes erected on the route, which is patronized by 48 families out of 98 families reported convenient for service. As there is no unserved territory which can be added to this route with a view to increasing its patronage, and as there is no prospect of an increased interest on the part of the existing patronage, 30 per cent of which can be served by route No. 2, and some of whom are located on the star route from Finger to Leapwood, which duplicates with the rural route for a distance of 2 miles, the continuance of service on this route was not deemed warranted, and it was accordingly ordered discontinued. The action of the Department in this case is in line with its policy as announced by the Postmaster-General in his annual report, issued December 5, 1905, page 89, which contemplates the discontinuance of the service where, because of a lack of appreciation of it, the expenditure involved is unwarranted, and the substitution of every-other-day service for daily service where the patronage is not sufficient to warrant daily service.

Very respectfully,

P. V. DE GRAW,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

Here is the statement that in the month of March this year in the letter I read from W. H. Harris, a merchant and a reliable man, who says since last December, the time referred to by the Fourth Assistant, fifty-seven additional boxes have been put up on this route No. 2, and they will soon have more than 3,000 pieces of mail per month. But without notice, without anything but the report of an inspector, the Department here with nothing but a regulation behind it, in pursuance of a policy which they speak of, discontinued one route entirely, of which I do not complain, neither do the people, and turns the other into a tri-weekly service, and sent one carrier in the cold world to live as best he can for no wrong of his. They turned him out after it was too late in that country to plant and make a crop successfully. Here he is with his horses, here he is with his back, here he is with his wife and children, if he has any, to starve, because this great Government through one branch of one Department says it is more economical to starve one man than to half starve two. Where is the justice? Why should Congress sit here waiting for adjournment with this kind of tyranny hanging over them? You will be blamed if you do not stand up against it. Now, let the Post-Office Committee or some member of it introduce and report a bill to allow a free-born, educated, and enlightened citizen decide for himself what kind of a box he can use. Let us say to him, You have sense enough to say what kind of a box you want to receive your mail in, and let him put it up and brand it. What are the facts now? There is no law or regulation requiring a box to be locked. Go up and down the rural routes and these little tin boxes, sold at I don't know how many hundred per cent profit, stand wide open with no kind of fastening device.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can't you take a penknife and cut any one of them open?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, of course I would not say that, for I do not know.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I can do it. [Laughter.] Are not our papers in the little towns in Tennessee delivered and put in the little wooden boxes at the front gates, and no one takes them away?

Mr. SIMS. Why, of course. I want to state that in all the star routes in my district where the box delivery has been established there has never yet been a complaint of destruction or damage to one of the wooden boxes, but, on the other hand, there have been a number of complaints that the steel-trust-made boxes have been damaged and broken open. The evil man thinks that the best value is where there is the greatest apparent security. A thief cracks a safe to get money, but never an ash barrel. [Laughter.] What do you want with these boxes if it is not simply to protect the mail from the weather? Nothing else. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General says that it is common sense and justice to let patrons on star routes put up such boxes as they desire, but the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General says, in effect, to the rural route patron: "No; you shall not risk your own property with your own method of protection; we will stop your routes, curtail them, shorten them, refuse to establish them, if you do not first patronize the steel-trust-made product."

Mr. Chairman, I am not talking because I feel in a good humor. [Laughter.] I am afraid I am manifesting a little too much temper. It does not help a case; but when you see people—humble, honest, God-fearing, country-loving citizens, who go to war and bare their breasts to the cannon's mouth—who are denied the simple privilege of receiving a postal card in such a box as they are willing to receive it in, it is enough to get one out of patience with the red-tapism of any autocratic, despotic bureau official who says that I must eat with a fork or starve. [Prolonged laughter.]

I want the people to know that we, their representatives, do not indorse the course being pursued by the honorable Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General and that we are in no sense responsible for it.

I have thus held up the ridiculous spectacle of one of the Assistant Postmaster-Generals saying that the rural patron shall not receive a postal card in any kind of a box except those of his dictating and choosing and another Assistant Postmaster-General saying to patrons on star-route lines: "Yes; put up boxes of your own choice, and the mail shall be deposited in them." Which of these officials would you suppose is possessed with the spirit of free-born American independence and self-respecting manhood?

I am indeed surprised that the present Postmaster-General permits such a state of affairs to exist in his Department. But I say to you gentlemen on the other side, you are responsible; this is your Administration; you can stop this unjust and tyrannical course now being pursued in hostility to the further extension of the free rural delivery service. It will be noticed in the letter above read from the honorable Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General he says that his action is taken in pursuance of the policy of the Postmaster-General. Who is the present Postmaster-General? Hon. George B. Cortelyou, chairman of the national Republican committee. If I wanted party advantage I should rather encourage the present administration of the free rural-delivery service; but as I prefer the best service the Government can give my constituents rather than party advantage I can not too strongly condemn the so-called "policy" of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber believe that the next great political contest in this country will be based upon the question of protection—protection to American industries. I arrive at that conclusion from the number of gentlemen who have addressed the country upon this subject, upon the bitterness of assault that they have made upon the system, and upon the hedging that I think I have discovered upon the part of some of these gentlemen as to the position they propose to take on the question. Everyone who is conversant with the history of this country, who knows aught of its politics, who has ever studied the attitude of parties upon this question, knows that the position of the Democratic party has at all times been that of a party of free traders. Recently two gentlemen of importance in the councils of that party have challenged this statement, and have declared that "the Democratic party at no time"—the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] emphasizing the fact by saying "either before or after the war"—"has declared itself to be in favor of free trade." I have thought that gentlemen who made that statement lacked something of familiarity with their own platforms. I would like to call attention to this language that I find in the twenty-first resolve of the Democratic platform adopted in the national convention in the year 1848:

Resolved, That the fruits of the great political triumph of 1844, which elected James K. Polk and George M. Dallas President and Vice-President of the United States, have fulfilled the hopes of the Democracy of the Union in defeating the declared purposes of their opponents in creating a national bank; in preventing the corrupt and unconstitutional distribution of the land proceeds from the common Treasury of the Union for local purposes; in protecting the currency and labor of the country from ruinous fluctuations, and guarding the money of the country for the use of the people by the establishment of the constitutional Treasury; in the noble impulse given to the cause of free trade by the repeal of the tariff of 1842, and the creation of the more equal, honest, and productive tariff of 1846.

Again I invite the attention of these gentlemen to the platform adopted in 1856. In the first resolve they say:

Resolved, That there are questions connected with the foreign policy of this country which are inferior to no domestic question whatever. The time has come for the people of the United States to declare themselves in favor of free seas and progressive free trade throughout the world, and by solemn manifestations to place their moral influence at the side of their successful example.

"Progressive free trade!" What does it mean?

Progressive.—A moving forward toward ideal completeness or perfection in respect to quality or condition.

Can you avoid the charge of having declared yourselves in favor of free trade as a policy that under Democratic rule and sway was to be made worldwide? The great question above all other domestic questions was this one of free seas and progressive free trade throughout the world.

Again, in their next convention they affirmed that same doctrine. Again it is their faith. Three times they have declared it, and everyone whose recollection goes back so far as to encompass some of those memorable campaigns knows that the watchword of the party in 1840, in 1844, in 1848, was free trade and sailors' rights.

I am not an old man like my friend here [Mr. GROSVENOR]. [Laughter and applause.] He was born twenty-four hours before I [applause]; and yet I can remember some of those campaigns, the torchlight processions, the legends on banners and transparencies, and free trade was their watchword and their shibboleth. Again, I have some proofs. There is in this House a gentleman from Missouri, stalwart in his politics, and a man whose word any man can take, a man in whom there are no disguises in politics, that which he believes he announces, and there are no occasions when policy, political, curbs his speech. He glories in his Democracy. Let me read briefly from him. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, after nine days of sore travail, at least one truth has been brought forth on the Republican side of this House, and that by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY], when he said that I would destroy every custom-house in America. He is entirely correct. If I had my way to-day, sir, I would tear them all down, from turret to foundation stone, for from the beginning they have been nothing but dens of robbers.

And at that utterance, so destructive to the property of the United States, involving so many millions of dollars, every gentleman on that side of the House laughed and applauded. Why? Because back of his declaration they recognized there lay the very foundation of their faith. But the gentleman went a little further than this. If he had not, it might be said this was a mere figure of speech, that this was but Pike County oratory, based upon some Scottish story. He said:

I am not in favor of free whisky, as is the gentleman. Neither have I any sympathy for the "moonshiners" in his district, who shoot down the revenue officers in the legitimate discharge of their duty as though they were so many dogs. I repeat, so that all men may hear, that I am a free trader, and proudly take my stand with Sir Robert Peel, Richard Cobden, John Bright, and Henry George. I may be but an humble member of that illustrious company, but it is better to be a doorkeeper in the house of honest free traders than to dwell in the tents of wicked protectionists.

And again there was laughter and applause on the Democratic side.

My entire plan for raising money enough to run the Government, "economically administered," which is the old Jeffersonian measure of taxation, is: First, to levy internal revenue on all proper subjects—high on luxuries, low or not at all on necessaries; second, to so amend the Constitution that a fair and equitable direct tax can be levied, and pass a law in pursuance thereof, which will cause the people to closely scrutinize their tax lists, that would prevent jobs and stealing here; third, to levy a graduated income tax, which would force the aggregated wealth of the country to bear its just proportion of the public burden. Sooner or later this scheme will be accepted as the settled policy of the country.

That is the opinion of this gentleman, and I undertake to say that could the House have been polled—that side of it—he would have been sustained by an overwhelming majority. It is their doctrine; it is their faith——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HEPBURN. For a question.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. May I ask one little bit of a question? Did the gentleman from Iowa, in the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, make a speech in favor of free trade in lumber?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think it is likely; yes, sir. We were cutting off our forests at a rate that we are now suffering from, and if you remember that speech, if you have done me the honor to read it, you will find I had based my argument upon that fact—upon the statement that we then had that within ten years the entire northern supply of lumber would be gone. I await the gentleman's pleasure.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I just wanted to remind the gentleman that free trade has been advocated by different members of all parties under certain particular circumstances.

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir. Free trade in certain particular things has been advocated at different times by different people, but no party has ever advocated the general policy of free trade that I know of except the Democratic party. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I can cite hundreds of speeches not less strong, positive, and vehement than that of the gentleman from Missouri, all declaratory of the faith of the party, "free trade," and especially is this true of the southern wing of the party. For ten years before the era of nullification and ever since that time it has been the one principle of party faith that has had the support of the largest number of Democrats. Sometimes it has been thinly veiled by declarations favoring a tariff for revenue only, or some other pretense, but always there has been hostility to the protection of American labor or American industries.

But, Mr. Chairman, what is the use of gentlemen splitting hairs about this matter? They are free traders, so far as protection is concerned. They are unwilling to give to the American manufacturer protection according to their own theories. What are they? Why, they tell us that they are in favor—some of them do now—I think the gentleman from Mississippi is hedging a little, and getting around on to a platform that was somewhat popular in 1884, and that did bring value to the Democratic party in 1892, namely, they are in favor now, they will tell us, of a tariff for revenue, with incidental protection—that kind of protection, we are told, that will not at once and totally destroy the manufacturing institutions that we have or drive from their employment the great multitude of laborers. But I insist that for purposes of protection there is no difference between free trade and a tariff for revenue only. There is no difference between them. What is a tariff for revenue purposes? That which will produce the largest amount of revenue. If that is your object, you want to establish such a rate as will not prevent the inflow of the article to be taxed. You want such a rate as will not inhibit the competition of the foreigner. You want such a rate as will give you the largest amount of imports; that will carry the largest rate of duty; because then you will have the largest amount of revenue. So that, logically, there is no difference, so far as protection is concerned, between a man who says that he is a free trader and a man who says that he is in favor of a tariff for revenue purposes only, and this shifting of position is somewhat ludicrous.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the gentleman permit one inquiry? Is it not a fact that Henry Clay stated he was a free trader at one time?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is not material to the argument that I am making. At one time John C. Calhoun and Daniel Webster changed places on the tariff question. They both shifted their position. I remember being told once by a gentleman in the city of Murfreesboro, Tenn., that he, as a boy, stood near the steps of what was then the capitol of Tennessee and saw Andrew Jackson leading a procession of Democrats into the hall of that house, carrying a transparency upon which was inscribed, "We are in favor of a national bank and a high protective tariff." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, if it should be true that our friends should shift their position and become advocates of a tariff for revenue purposes, with incidental protection, how singular will appear to them their platform of last year and earlier years, where they denounced all protection as robbery. Incidental protection! Would it not be incidental robbery? A little protection! Would it not be a little crime? It seems to me that there will be the difficulty that these gentlemen will labor under.

But they have many methods of assault upon the Republican party. One of those that is now most insisted upon is the fact that dumping is indulged in by Americans. It is not a new thing. Dumping is the disposal of the surplus of production in another country, even at less than the ordinary price charged for it in the country of production. Our Democratic brethren talk about that as if it were a new growth and result entirely of the protective system. Why, it is more than a century old. It is a practice that merchants have followed for a century of time. Whenever they have found that a rival is looming up in any country, that menaces in any way their future supremacy, at once, by the process of dumping, they strive to break down that industry. Their surplus is sent into that market, underselling the market at home, striking down the rival manufacturers; and when the purpose is accomplished, and the rival has been destroyed, when the competition has ceased, then go back to old prices and the foreign merchant recoups himself and makes good the losses after he is monarch of the situation and owns and controls absolutely his rivals. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] Let me read very briefly from an English author, W. J. Ashley, upon this subject. He says:

But just as it will pay a manufacturer or merchant to cut prices for a time below what will give him the ordinary profit—— or even to a point involving actual loss, if thereby he can drive out of business a rival manufacturer or merchant, so it may pay to "dump" goods on a foreign market if thereby a dangerous competition can be destroyed. This dumping, of which we hear so much of late, is nothing new. It is the ordinary outcome of mercantile ethics, the ethics of industrial war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the title of the book?

Mr. HEPBURN. The Tariff Problem, page 70—

That is on page 70. Again, on page 93, he says:

Let us quote first the evidence, in May, 1901, before the United States Industrial Commission, of Mr. Charles M. Schwab, then president of the United States steel trust: "Export prices are made at a very much lower rate than those here, but there is no one who has been a manufacturer for any length of time who will not tell you that the reason he sold, even at a loss, was to run his works full and steady. That has been the chief thing regarding all of these companies in their export business. For example, export in very busy times like these is comparatively light, because we have been able to run full, and it is maintained more for the purpose of keeping in the foreign market than for any other reason. When we have as much as we can do at home, as we have to-day, people are not anxious to sell material at low prices, but when our mills are not running steadily and full we will take orders at low prices, even if there is some loss in so doing, in order to keep running."

On page 71 I find a note, which I insert here. It is as follows:

Of course, as Mr. Carnegie observes, speaking of the "dumping of surplus" upon the American market by English makers in earlier decades, "it forces the home makers to accept for their entire output the extreme low rates which had only to be taken by the invader for a small part of his." (Empire of Business, p. 230.)

On page 96 I find the following:

My idea is that the English and German manufacturers invariably make a dumping ground of America when they are slack of work; they distribute their fixed charge over a full tonnage; they get their profit out of the home trade and dump their surplus into America. We want to take a leaf out of the book of the German and the Englishman, and we want to send stuff abroad.

On page 97 there is an extract from the testimony of Mr. Gates, president of the American Steel and Wire Company, from which I quote:

Question. Will you kindly explain the business reasons for doing that?

Answer. The business reason for doing that is that by working up a foreign business we can operate our mills more fully, we can make our goods cheaper, and whenever the time comes that there is a decline of the home price it will not necessarily affect the foreign prices. There are times when the export prices are higher than the home prices. Just at the present time our home prices, I think, are probably 50, 60, or 70 cents a hundred higher than our export. I do not really know just the difference, but I know there is a difference in favor of export to-day. At times it is the other way. But by manufacturing, say, 200,000 tons of wire per annum to export to all parts of the world we cheapen the entire cost of manufacture very materially. By doing that we are able to give the consumer at home a lower price in the long run, and employ perhaps 25 or 30 per cent more workmen, so that in the long run we figure that it will equalize itself. Our home prices and our foreign prices are never necessarily on a parity; one might be higher and the other might be lower; it would depend entirely upon circumstances.

On page 98 I find the following:

Hitherto I have said nothing of the payment by industrial combinations of quasi bounties upon exports. This is because, so far as I know, this plan has never been resorted to by American producers, and it is from America that incomparably the gravest danger to English manufactures is to be expected. It has, indeed, been an important factor in encouraging the sale of German steel in this country during the last year or so; and accordingly I shall return to its consideration in the next chapter.

Again, from page 114, I quote:

We have seen what the economic forces are which will increasingly oblige the great manufacturing countries to seek an outlet from time to time for their surplus product in foreign markets; and this at prices below those at which they sell at home, and even below the cost of production, if we understand by cost of production the normal remuneration of all the agents of production, including capital. We have seen that this is no exceptional phenomenon, but the inevitable and periodically recurring consequence of modern methods of production under competitive conditions. We have seen, also, that this export policy is facilitated by the absence of customs barriers in the countries to which the goods are offered and by their maintenance at home, so as to protect the higher domestic prices.

This subject was industriously studied by the Commission mentioned in this volume, and it was found and reported by them that of our entire manufactures, then reaching to nearly $13,000,000,000, only $4,000,000 worth had been dumped in other markets at a lower than the home price—one-thirtieth of 1 per cent of our manufactures.

I heard a gentleman the other day make a statement that I am satisfied he was not warranted in making. He was discussing this practice, and he said:

As a result of this sort of practice, already in this country it has not only become impossible to buy in the cheapest market, but it has become impossible for the American citizen to buy American goods made in the cheapest market. Up here for fifteen hundred miles along our northern frontier they have built a railroad out of American steel rails, and it cost $27 a ton for the rails that built every mile of it. It cost $27 per ton for the rails that built every mile of siding, and for the rails that keep it in repair. Just on the other side of the border, over in Canada, they have built another railroad, in every sense of the term a parallel and competing line, out of rails that cost $22 a ton, but the rails out of which the Canadian road is built and the rails out of which the American road is built all came from the same factory here in the United States, protected by our tariff laws.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that gentleman was misled when he made that statement. No such statement of fact is true or can be proved.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. To which does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield to either.

Mr. RAINEY. The statement I made was based upon the statement of James J. Hill, of the Great Northern road, before the Senate committee which investigated this subject. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I want to state that the late Daniel Lamont told me in New York himself, and gave me liberty to make the statement wherever I chose, and refer to him as authority as one of the officials of the Great Northern Railway, that that was a fact. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not care who makes the statement. I deny it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not say all the rails.

Mr. HEPBURN. I challenge any man to make the proof. It can not be made. It is one of the statements of the men who are trying to break down the protective system, and because of its very boldness and audacity men give credence to it; but I challenge the proof. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I afterwards made that statement during the last campaign and stated my references, and now I go one step further and state that the proof can be furnished.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well, furnish it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And in due time I will furnish this proof as to the railroad called the "Mexican National," I believe (and that evidence appeared before a Senate hearing). The rails for that part of their road to be laid in Texas cost them $27 a ton, and the rails for that part of their road to be laid upon Mexican soil cost them $20 a ton, all bought from the same manufacturers, and they were all carried there over the same road. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to have my time taken up now. The gentleman can make the proof in his own time. What do I care for your simple denial? I demand proof on these matters, gentlemen. [Applause on the Republican side.] Why, Mr. Chairman, we heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] the other day take two hours, and he contented himself with making bold, broad, baseless charges, with not an iota of proof; he told us the other day of the great watch trust. Did he introduce an iota of proof as to the existence of such a trust? It was simply his ipse dixit in this matter, no proof whatever. We have heard this thing long enough. I want the gentleman to verify some of these statements.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I want to read the gentleman some proof.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the Chairman protect me from that stalwart? [Laughter on the Republican side.] Mr. Chairman, it is an easy matter for gentlemen to get up on the floor and talk about the trusts and combinations and all of these evil things when it brings reproach upon their political adversaries, but it is an entirely different thing for these gentlemen to furnish the proofs of these facts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will allow me, I have the proofs right here.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will allow the gentleman to read them in his own time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has called for proofs, and I will read them to him. I have them here—the sworn testimony before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the sworn testimony before the committee upon the railway rate hearings——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has declined to yield, and the gentleman from Mississippi is out of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield for me to ask him this question and not to read?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman will not yield, but the gentleman will listen patiently to you when your time comes. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not defy you to furnish proof and then decline to let you do it.

Mr. RAINEY. I want to say to the gentleman I will furnish proof for the charges I have made.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think it is very likely that gentlemen may be able to find that on many occasions there has been sold American manufactures abroad cheaper than at home—that is, cheaper than the price that the articles have been sold for when there was a demand for them at home. But who is there that does not know that this charge with regard to this railway company north of us is an untruth when they say that the price was $27 a ton for nearly 300,000 tons of steel? That means that the article could be sold for that price, and yet that the owner of that immense amount of property, in this transaction of nearly $8,000,000, elected to sell to Canadians across the border at a loss of a million and a half dollars. The trouble about this proposition is this—the gentleman establishes a fabulous and untruthful and unreal price at home. There was no $27 price here, or else the articles would have been sold here. There was no demand for it here at that price or it would have been sold here. It might have been that at some other time there was a demand, and before the lull in the demand came that there was a price such as they suggest and quote and bring in close juxtaposition with the price received abroad.

Think of the absurdity of the statement I have quoted from the speech of the gentleman from Illinois concerning the two railroads—evidently the Northern Pacific or the Great Northern in the United States, and the Canadian Pacific in Canada. Remember, these roads were not built simultaneously. They each occupied years in building. During the years of their building the prices did not remain uniform either in the United States or Canada. There was great fluctuation in the price of rails both at home and abroad, and a large portion of all of the three roads had been built long before the price of steel rails reached $22 per ton or even the price of $27 per ton. The gentleman has been deceived by some designing person, who wanted to use his excellent speech in an unwarrantable way to attack the protective system. A system that made it possible to buy rails at even $27 per ton, or any price greatly below the English price of $150 per ton, the price prevailing when protection made it possible for our manufacturers to enter into competition with their English rails.

Mr. Chairman, the Republican position in regard to the tariff question is not a matter of doubt. In the last national convention we said:

Protection, which guards and develops our industries, is a cardinal principle of the party. The measure of protection should always at least equal the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. We insist upon the maintenance of the principle of protection, and therefore rates of duty should be readjusted only when conditions have so changed that the public interest demands their alteration, but this work can not be safely committed to any other hands than those of the Republican party. To intrust it to the Democratic party is to invite disaster. Whether, as in 1892, the Democratic party declares the protective tariff unconstitutional, and whether it demands tariff reform or tariff revisions, its real object is always the destruction of the protective system. However specious the name, the purpose is ever the same. A Democratic tariff has always been followed by business adversity, a Republican tariff by business prosperity. To a Republican Congress and a Republican President this great question can be safely intrusted. When the only free-trade country among the great nations agitates a return to protection, the chief protective country should not falter in maintaining it.

We have extended widely our foreign markets, and we believe in the adoption of all the practicable methods for their further extension, including commercial reciprocity wherever reciprocal arrangements can be effected consistent with the principles of protection and without injury to American agriculture, American labor, or any American industry.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

That is the Republican doctrine. Where we engage even in reciprocal commercial treaties we want to see to it that every interest is protected and that no industry is injured by that arrangement. It is as broad in its declaration as the land; it is as complete as the varied industries; it is as widespread as all the people who may be benefited and blessed by it.

Mr. Chairman, we have often been told that this policy—this protective policy; this "building a Chinese wall about us"—must result in isolation and all of those evils that come to the isolated nation. Our tariff scheme and policy by its enemies is sometimes called a Chinese wall, and we are told—oh, how many times has the country been told!—that its maintenance and perpetuation means our separation from the balance of the commercial world. How is it in actual practice, contradistinguished from Democratic theory? Instead of isolation, our intercourse with other nations is as progressive as is our enterprise. There has been no reduction of our exports. Oh, no; but each effort that we have made toward the securing of the home market for ourselves has given us broader and further entry into the markets of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.] I was particularly amused the other day at the bland and childlike manner with which the gentleman from Tennessee asked the gentleman from Illinois if in the days of the tariff of 1846 this wicked practice of selling watches abroad for less than they sold at home was in vogue, and I saw the expression of relief, of intense gratification, that came over his handsome face when the gentleman from Illinois told him that never, no, never, under the tariff of 1846 had American manufacturers sold watches abroad for less than they sold them at home. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. BROOCKS of Texas. I desire to ask just a question for information.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I will give it to the gentleman after I am through. If it is just for information he seeks, he can afford to wait a little while. [Laughter.] I do not want to be rude, but I have only a little time. Surely not. We sold no watches abroad for less price than we sold them at home. No; nor for any price. We made but few watches here prior to 1870, and none for export. We bought our watches from abroad—from the English and the Swiss. And we paid them just such prices as their cupidity demanded. We could not compete. Our manufacturers had no protection, and our consumers had no competition, so that the foreigner charged us what he pleased. In 1842 the value of watches imported was $390,424. In 1858 we imported watches and parts of watches to the value of $3,800,000, and in 1860 to the value of $2,788,671. Our entire production of watches and parts of watches, including watch repairing, in 1860 amounted to but $1,524,000. Last year the watches manufactured in the United States amounted to more than $14,000,000. And I have no doubt that a small fraction of them were sold in foreign countries for a less sum than was habitually demanded here. Yet think of the price, the exceedingly low price we pay for the superior watch of to-day compared to the price, the exorbitant price, we were compelled to pay fifty years ago for the inferior watch of that day.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of this committee briefly just for a moment to something that the census for the ten years from 1895 to 1905 discloses in the State in which I live. The increase in the value of farm lands was 41 per cent in that time. The increase in the value of farm grains was 80 per cent; the increase in the value of cattle was 68 per cent; the increase in the value of swine was 93 per cent; the increase in the value of dairy products was 46 per cent; the increase in the gross earnings of railroads was 82 per cent, and the net earnings 60 per cent; the increase in the product of manufacturers was 84 per cent, and in the products of coal mines 152 per cent; the increase in bank deposits of all banks 193 per cent, and of savings banks deposits only 255 per cent. These are all increases in ten years under this tariff system of ours, as will be seen from the following table:

[From the State Census Report, 1905.]

	1895.	1905.	Included in ten years.	Per cent.
Value of land in farms	$1,088,063,065	$1,552,106,449	$464,043,381	41
Value of farm grains	90,344,364	162,599,910	72,255,546	80
Value of cattle	53,820,197	91,019,753	37,199,556	68
Value of horses and mules	42,986,312	82,807,463	39,821,151	93

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not want to be interrupted. I do not want to be rude, but I want to use my hour.

Mr. RUCKER. I merely wanted to say——

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well, I do not want the gentleman to say it. Mr. Chairman, I undertake to say that that is a wonderful growth, and it should be borne in mind that two years of this time were lost to progress, that two years and more of this time our Democratic brethren were in control and policies of their making were in vogue, and that we were laboring under the distressful conditions that came to the whole country as a result of their being intrusted with a brief period of power. For two years of this time the tariff of 1894 was in force. I have no doubt that if this census had been taken from the year 1897 instead of from the year 1895 the same percentage of growth would have been apparent in the eight years which is shown in the total of ten years.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, neither I nor any friend of the protective system believes that it is perfect. No one can be found to assert that. All that we claim for it is that under it, as compared with any other system, the blessings are shown to be beyond comparison greater than under that other system, no matter what it is. [Applause on the Republican side.] Look at our currency and see how it has grown. In 1878 there was eight hundred millions all told. We have now quite three billions, and it is natural that it should be so, because, instead of sending our wealth abroad when we are under a tariff that invites the competition of the nations and the inflow of the products of their industry, instead of sending abroad our money, gold and silver and portable wealth, to pay for that which we ought to make, we do under our system make that which we need and keep our money at home, and so the circulation grows, and with the circulation grows the individual credit and the national credit, as evidenced by the rate of interest for the public and for the private individual.

Think of the interest rate under the old system of 1846 to 1861 and compare that with the rate of interest now. Two-thirds of all the land within the State of Iowa from 1846 to 1861 was taken from the Government on the basis of the payment of 40 per cent interest. The land agent, the man with means or with the land warrants, would say to the entryman, "Give me your note for $280 and I will give you a bond for a deed at the end of one year," time being the essence of the contract on the payment of $280 for the 160 acres of land, the minimum Government price of which was $1.25 an acre. That was the manner in which the hardy pioneers of that day were able to secure their land from the Federal Government under the system that our friends tell us is the best. But look at the comforts of life; compare the wage system now with that of olden times; look at the comforts in the home. Gentlemen tell us sometimes that there are no more now than there used to be. I think that is a serious mistake. They tell us now that there has been such an enhancement of value of articles entering into daily life that at the end of the year the workman has no more than in former times. I think that is a mistake. I remember, though, that it is not in the mouths of our Democratic brethren to tell us, to taunt us wih the rise in values. What was the contention of ten years ago, gentlemen? What were you then striving for? What was the mission of the Democratic party and of Bryan in those days if it was not to arrest the downward trend of falling prices? [Applause on the Republican side.] We have done it. We have arrested that trend and prices are going up. I have given you some evidences of it here in this little statement that I have made of comparison of values this last year in Iowa with a period ten years earlier.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party itself indulged in some inconsistencies in regard to this matter of the tariff. They say in their platform of 1884:

Knowing full well, however, that legislation affecting the operations of the people should be cautious and conservative in method—not in advance of public opinion, but responsive to its demand—the Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests. But in making reductions in taxes, it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth. From the foundation of this Government taxes collected at the custom-house has been the chief source of the Federal revenue. Such they must continue to be. Moreover, many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved. The process of reform must be subject in the execution to this plain dictate of justice; all taxation shall be limited to the requirements of economical government. The necessary reduction and taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

That was Democratic doctrine once—that is, one of their national platforms—and when that struck my attention the other day I could not help but think that perhaps the gentleman from Illinois, in some of those wonderful figures of speech that he indulged in toward the close of his second day's oration, was not very far wrong. He said that the Democratic party has no leaders. He particularly emphasized the fact that the gentleman from Mississippi, while he thought he was the leader, as a matter of fact was but masquerading in the plumage of one. [Applause on the Republican side.] That the leadership in fact did not belong to him; and the gentleman further said that the great living motto of the Democratic party was, "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none," and that they had emblazoned that in letters of living light upon the clouds, and that that pillar of clouds by day and pillar of fire by night were the leader of the Democratic party. [Applause on the Republican side.] And possibly that might be true. We remember how light and easily wafted are the clouds; how the wind blows wheresoever it listeth, and move this leader here or there, wherever the breeze might indicate [laughter and applause], and if you will take the trouble to diagram the Democratic national platforms you will find that there is nothing on earth that looks so much like the diagram as the diagram of prices in the Chicago wheat pit when there is an exciting period [laughter and applause], following the angles, jagged here and there and elsewhere, moved by this breeze.

Gentlemen, quit it! quit it!! It is the most foolish thing for you to do to rely on leadership like that. Why, it is even worse than your triple-headed leadership of Bryan HEARST & Co. [Laughter.] You have no right to follow that kind of leadership now, because you have had an example. The Jews did it once. They had to pass a little wilderness of some 200 miles or less, and they had a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, and they followed it, and they were forty years in getting through. [Laughter and applause.] And only two of them got a glimpse of the Promised Land, and they were on the other side of Jordan. [Great laughter.] Do not do it; any kind of leadership is better than that, although you have become so used to it and have been following it, lo, these many years. Let me urge you, gentlemen, not to take as your type and symbol the type and symbol of the great Democratic party—that figure that was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois. It is not a fit one. A Roman soldier, that has been sightless for two thousand years—twenty centuries—that has only been dug out of the ashes a very little while [laughter], and that still hangs on to the chain, not that opens the gate, but that closes the gate—[loud applause on the Republican side]—that is hardly a desirable symbol of the Democratic party, although its wonderful fitness might excite the risibles of Americans. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed until he finishes.

Mr. HEPBURN. I only want a moment more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may continue his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not sympathize with the gentleman from Illinois in the disregard that he pays to majorities. I take great pride, great pride, in the fact that the American people, the voters, by an overwhelming majority, a majority of more than a million and a half of the voting force of the United States, gave approval less than two years ago to the policies of the Republican party and to its views on the protective system, and encouragement to them to hold on and persevere. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Ah, gentlemen, there are those who attempt to deride us and belittle us by applying as opprobrious the term "stand-patter;" and some have said that the only "stand-patter" is that one that is dead. Not so. We mean by that, having tried the various policies, to hold fast to that one that we know is good—the protective system. [Applause.] That is what we mean. We have shown that, holding fast to our principles, we have been right, making that progress that the nation has needed. We have been able to guide it on its wonderful way. We have been able to push it forward. Everything great or good that has been suggested to the men living on this continent during the last forty-five years has come from the Republican party. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] Progressive! Oh, yes; we are. We could progress from the old teachings of the old masters to that height of patriotism and love of liberty that declared slaves should not exist. We could progress from our love of peace to entering into the greatest war that the nations have known in order to preserve the Union. We could make sacrifices of the gravest character in order to restore the States. We could build up the broken fortunes of the Republic by restoring its credit. We could progress from the penury of the old days to the splendid conditions of currency and of credit of to-day. We could go forward from this, being a borrowing nation, a purchasing nation, a dependent nation, to one where we stood at the apex, capable of loaning to the world, capable of manufacturing for the world, capable of meeting the commerce of the world, capable of feeding and of clothing the nations. Ah, the Republican party is a progressive party, but it never progresses beyond the limitation of its principles. [Loud and continued applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LAMB. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen on the other side are applauding the usual able and eloquent speech of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], defending, as he did, protective tariff, and indirectly their unholy offspring—trusts—and yet, Mr. Chairman, not one word did he utter in defense of the proposition to put building material on the free list to aid the unfortunate earthquake victims in rebuilding their homes and business houses at a reasonable and just expense.

In days gone by, under ordinary conditions, the monopolized article was placed on the free list to rid the people of monopolies, that the people might live and move about at a reasonable expense. But here, when the earth has opened up and swallowed hundreds of Californians, and fire has laid their homes in ashes, a whole hour is spent in defending the Republican party and its robber tariffs, while the steel and lumber trusts hold up these mourning victims, demanding their oppressive prices for building material, and yet not a word has the distinguished gentleman said about untaxing such material for the benefit of the Californians spared by the earthquake, although bills to remove this tax are pending before this body.

Protective tariffs are and must be defended while these people suffer. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Ah, gentlemen, the distinguished Speaker ridicules free trade, while a Republican State and her voters suffer for the want of it.

Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman and his party help to make Garfield President? Certainly they did. In 1866 and in 1870 Mr. Garfield said:

I am for a protection which leads to ultimate free trade.

Yet he was made President by the gentleman's great influence and that of his allies, who stand to-day mute when we urge free-listing building material to aid these victims.

The Democratic party is not for free trade per se; it is for revenue tariff only, Mr. Chairman; the same kind of a tariff that the Senator from Iowa, Senator ALLISON, said for all general purposes of this Government was the best tariff that we ever had—the act of 1846. We do not hear the gentleman refer to that indorsement. We do not hear him refer to the words of John Sherman, who said:

Every advance toward the free exchange of commodities is an advance of civilization.

The gentleman is against civilization, according to John Sherman. He further said:

Every obstruction to free exchange is born of the same narrow despotic spirit which planted castles upon the Rhine to plunder peaceful commerce. Every obstruction to commerce is a tax upon consumption. Every facility to a free exchange cheapens commodities, increases trade and population, and supports civilization.

Mr. Chairman, I have risen at this hour to protest against an hour's speech for tariff robbery with not one word said for free trade for suffering California, a State whose people came to the rescue of McKinley, that came to the rescue of Roosevelt. Yet the Republican party dare not go to its rescue and free-list structural material; but, on a moment's notice, they quickly, and rightfully, vote a million and a half of the hard tax-earned money of our people out of the Treasury to help them. Verily, gentlemen, your sins will yet find you out. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 18537) and had directed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14508. An act permitting the building of dams across the north and south branches of Rock River, adjacent to Vandruffs Island and Carrs Island, and across the cut-off between said islands, in Rock Island County, Ill., in aid of navigation and for the development of water power; and

H. R. 16954. An act providing for the reappraisement of certain suburban lots in the town site of Port Angeles, Wash.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. J. Res. 141. An act for the further relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast;

H. R. 10152. An act granting certain lands to the city of Biloxi, in Harrison County, Miss., for park and cemetery purposes; and

H. R. 15910. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commutation for good conduct for United States prisoners," approved June 21, 1902.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURTON of Ohio, for two days, on account of important business.

JOSEPH FLEWHARD.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. SMITH of Maryland, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Joseph Flewhard (H. R. 6908), no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a certified copy of an ordinance of the executive council of Porto Rico permitting an extension of a railroad track into the city of Arecibo and the use of a portion of a certain highway—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the documents received and distributed by the Department during the calendar year 1905—to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of William A. Bethel, administrator of the estate of Martha Harrison, and Oliver P. Lister against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Calcasieu Lake and River, Louisiana—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BUCKMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2785) to authorize the sale of down timber and hay on the ten sections of land in the Chippewa of the Mississippi Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, reserved from sale or settlement in accordance with the provisions of the act of January 14, 1889, as amended, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3614); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented resolutions adopted by the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, praying for the enactment of legislation for the acquisition of forest reservations in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
New York, April 25, 1906.

At the monthly meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, held this day, Mr. John H. Washburn, for the committee on forests, submitted the following report, and it was unanimously adopted, viz:

To the New York Board of Trade and Transportation:

GENTLEMEN: In pursuance of a report made to this board, June 4, 1904, upon a bill favorably reported by the United States Senate Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and the House of Representatives Committee on Agriculture for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, the forestry committee begs leave to say that the report then made was indorsed, and the creation of such a reserve was recommended by the board.

The committee now wishes to state that a substitute bill is pending before Congress; that its purpose is to acquire "forest reserves in the Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains, to be known as the 'Appalachian Forest Reserve' and the 'White Mountain Forest Reserve,' respectively."

It is an interesting fact that the area of existing national forest reserves west of the Mississippi embraces nearly 93,000,000 acres, while there is no national reserve east of the Mississippi, and the only public reserve of any consequence is that belonging to the State of New York, embracing 1,436,686 acres, the creation of which was almost exclusively due to the work of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation.

Among the essential objects to be gained by the creation of these reserves is the protection of the head waters of almost all the important rivers of five of the New England States, and practically the head waters of the chief rivers in the South, east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio River.

The protection of the sources of these river systems is necessary to the conservation and future development, in a large measure, of the internal navigation and commerce of these five New England States and of nine of the Southern States, as well as the mining and agricultural industries of the latter and also of the vast and increasing manufacturing interests of both of these sections of our country.

The attention of the board is called to the evils and losses from alternate drought and flood, the former becoming more severe with the removal of the forest cover, while the freshets increase their destructive powers—the losses in the Appalachians by the spring freshets of the last two years amounting to $18,000,000, or about nine times the sum set aside by this bill for the acquiring of lands in these regions. At the same time, it is to be observed that the partial stripping of the wooded reliefs of the White Mountain sections has imposed a very heavy annual burden or tax upon the cost of many goods made upon streams fed by those watersheds, the enforced substitution of steam as a motive power for water power, now so uncertain and irregular, costing each year hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The continued deforestation of the regions under consideration can not therefore fail to work correspondingly to the advantage of the manufacturing and all other industries dependent upon the proper flow of their rivers and tributaries. What is more, it will happen at a time when competition between the most advanced nations has not only reached a stage unprecedented in the history of the commercial world, but must grow more severe owing to the progressive, intelligent, and forceful character of those engaged in the direction of this mercantile rivalry. With such an outlook, no advantage, either acquired or natural, which any section of our country possesses should be sacrificed or needlessly wasted.

More particularly does this apply to that section watered by the watersheds of the Southern Appalachians. Raising such a large proportion of raw cotton, one of the most important gifts of nature to mankind, with a native population peculiarly adapted to its successful cultivation, a favoring climate, and water and electric powers practically unlimited, if wisely conserved and applied, it should in time be able to wrest from the nations of Europe the cotton trade of the nations and peoples inhabiting the countries and islands washed by the Pacific Ocean, and now constituting more than half the population of the globe. Great as it is at present, it is insignificant as to what it must be when the East has awakened from the lethargy of its ancient civilizations and entered upon the march of modern progress.

With such advantages, among others, to be conserved, acquired, and guaranteed by the preservation of the watersheds forming the subject-matter of this report, your forestry committee respectfully submits for your action the following resolution:

Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade and Transportation heartily indorses Senate bill 4953 for the creation of a White Mountain forest reserve and a Southern Appalachian Mountain reserve, and earnestly recommends that it be passed by the present Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

EDMUND P. MARTIN, Secretary,
JOHN H. WASHBURN,
PETER F. SCHOFIELD,
HENRY S. HARPER,
Committee on Forests.

Mr. FRYE. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to report the bill favorably and ask for its present consideration. It will not take a minute.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to extend the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, relating to the transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, to the port of Buffalo, in the State of New York.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEES ON TERRITORIES.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. DILLINGHAM (for Mr. BEVERIDGE), reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed by the Committee on Territories to report hearings on Senate bill No. 191, and other matters pending before said committee, and the stenographer hereby authorized to be employed by said committee from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such testimony as may be taken by said committee or its subcommittees, in connection with matters pending before it, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that said committee be authorized to have such testimony printed for its use.

NOTICES UNDER PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5789) to regulate the publication of notices issued under the public-land laws, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It is very short.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all notices which the general provisions of the mineral and public land laws require to be published in newspapers shall be published in the newspaper of established character published nearest the lands described in such notices and within the land district or county in which such lands are located; and in cases where two or more such papers are published in the town nearest such lands, or in two or more towns which are of equal distance from such lands, such notices shall be published in any one of such papers as may be designated for that purpose by the register of the land office from which such notice issued.

Mr. HALE. The matter of giving notice by publication in cases affecting public lands is a very important one. The notice may be so obscure and coming from such an obscure source that nobody sees it. I wish the Senator would explain, so that the Senate will realize what change is contemplated in this bill, what is required now in the way of notices—from what kind of newspapers, how that is changed, and whether the Senator is sure that under the bill there will not be notices published that nobody will see and nobody will know of, and that private and public rights will be lost by reason of it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think that the apprehension of the Senator from Maine is not fully justified. It would be difficult to legislate so as to provide that a notice published in any newspaper should be read by a given number of people. Of course a large number of papers are obscure publications. That can not be obviated or regulated by law.

The only difference between this bill and the existing law is this: The existing law provides that these notices shall be published in the newspaper nearest the land affected by such notice. It is provided in this bill that it shall be published within the land district or county where the land is situated. That is the only change from existing law.

Mr. HALE. What good purpose is subserved by that change? Why is it any better notice under the bill which the Senator reports than it is now under the present law?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will say to the Senator that there are several instances where the lands affected are the nearest to newspapers that are published in other States. For instance, in one case in North Dakota the lands affected are nearer to newspapers published in South Dakota, so that the paper published in South Dakota does not circulate, as the Senator can well understand, among North Dakota readers. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. HALE. The bill provides for the publication of the notice in a paper circulating nearest to the land?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Precisely; and in order to do that it is necessary to publish it in the county and land district within which the land is located.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Where is the publication made now?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In the particular case I have mentioned it is made in South Dakota, and the lands lie in North Dakota.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But generally speaking?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is made in a newspaper nearest the land.

Mr. HALE. The land districts do not extend into more than one State?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No; they do not; they are confined within the borders of the State.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is a veteran on this kind of legislation and ought to know whether the bill will be an advantage or not. My attention was called to it by the fact that every now and then before the Committee on Appropriations, in questions coming up touching lands, the question of notice is sometimes found to be important.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes; it is important.

Mr. HALE. And sometimes public and private rights are lost because there has been no adequate advertisement and notice.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. My own judgment is if this bill becomes a law it will add materially to the benefit of the situation.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I did not understand from the explanation made by the Senator from North Dakota just what change the bill does make in the present law. I am a member of the committee from which it comes, but was not able to be present at the time it was considered. I suppose it was considered at the last meeting, was it not?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. I understand the law at the present time requires the notice to be published in the newspaper nearest to the land?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Nearest to the land. It is proposed to add that it shall be published also within the land district or county in which the land is located, so that the publication relative to such land in North Dakota will not take place in South Dakota, as heretofore, where the newspaper does not circulate in North Dakota.

Mr. FULTON. Suppose there is no——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the morning business over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been closed.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is before the Senate now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota reported Senate bill 5789 from the Committee on Public Lands and asked unanimous consent for its present consideration. The bill was read.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to be taking a considerable amount of debate, and I should like to have it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection——

Mr. FULTON. It will not take any further time as far as I am concerned.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not think there will be any further debate.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. TELLER. Let us know what the bill is before objection is made to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado wish to have the bill read by its title?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what it is, by title at least.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let the bill be again read. It is a short bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be again read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me for a question?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Under the law as it is proposed to be amended, will the designation of the papers remain with the register?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. With the register.

Mr. BERRY. Is the bill in the identical language of the present law in that respect?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is a copy of existing law with these words added:

Within the land district or county in which such lands are located.

Mr. TELLER. Is that all the change?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is the only change in the existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 5918) for the relief of the St. Paul Reform Church, of Woodstock, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 5919) for the relief of the estate of James S. Ford, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 5920) granting an increase of pension to Sinnett A. Duling; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (for Mr. WARNER) introduced a bill (S. 5921) granting an increase of pension to Hiram G. Hunt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 5922) granting an increase of pension to John W. Virden; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 5923) for the construction of a sea wall at Fort Screven, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 5924) to extend the provisions of the existing bounty land laws to the officers and enlisted men, and the officers and men of the boat companies, of the Florida Seminole Indian war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE introduced a bill (S. 5925) for the relief of the city of New London, Conn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RAYNER (for Mr. GORMAN) introduced a bill (S. 5926) providing for the payment of a certain judgment or decree against Henry E. McKee, agent and trustee for the Choctaw Nation of Indians, out of funds payable to the said nation of Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 5927) granting an increase of pension to H. C. Phipps; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5928) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Gaffney; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 5929) granting an increase of pension to John A. Richards; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 5930) for the relief of Benjamin Hyde; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5931) granting a pension to Deborah B. Roman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 5932) granting an increase of pension to E. R. Merriman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (S. 5933) to correct the military record of Wyatt F. Runnion;

A bill (S. 5934) to correct the military record of Louis L. Runnion;

A bill (S. 5935) to correct the military record of Edmund Reece; and

A bill (S. 5936) to correct the military record of Levi Taylor.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced a bill (S. 5937) for the relief of Leonidos H. Hall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5938) granting an increase of pension to Gabriel Sams; and

A bill (S. 5939) granting an increase of pension to Jules Rector.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 5940) granting an increase of pension to Henry Bittleston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 5941) granting an increase of pension to Joseph E. Layton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 5942) to provide for finishing the crypt of the chapel, United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., as a permanent resting place for the body of John Paul Jones; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying letter from the Navy Department, which was ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KITTREDGE introduced a bill (S. 5943) to authorize the Minnesota, Dakota and Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FLINT introduced a bill (S. 5944) providing for examinations and surveys for the location of reclamation and irrigation works in the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys, in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Irrigation.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a bill (S. 5945) providing for an inspection of certain agricultural products, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HEMENWAY introduced a joint resolution (S. J. R. 52) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the board of trustees of Vincennes University, Vincennes, Ind., such obsolete arms and other military equipments now in possession of said university, to be used in military instruction; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT OF JOSEPH L. BRISTOW.

On motion of Mr. MILLARD, it was Ordered, That there be printed and bound in paper covers for the use of the Senate 500 copies of the report of Joseph L. Bristow, Special Panama Railroad Commissioner, to the Secretary of War, June 24, 1905.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. NEWLANDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $9,500 for grading, regulating, and macadamizing Albemarle street east from Connecticut avenue extended to Broad Branch road, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Montana submitted an amendment proposing to amend the act of April 23, 1904, relative to the survey and allotment of lands within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On April 19:

S. R. 48. Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast; and

S. 5026. An act providing for the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Neah Bay, in the State of Washington, and for the construction of a first-class ocean-going tug to be used in connection therewith, for life-saving purposes in the vicinity of the north Pacific coast of the United States, and so forth.

On April 21:

S. 980. An act to authorize the sale of a portion of the lower Brulé Indian Reservation in South Dakota, and for other purposes; and

S. R. 49. Joint resolution construing the joint resolution approved April 19, 1906, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of sufferers from earthquake and conflagration on the Pacific coast."

On April 23:

S. R. 46. Joint resolution to fill a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

On April 26:

S. 4339. An act to amend section 4502 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to bonds and oath of shipping commissioners;

S. 4925. An act to amend the act approved March 6, 1896, relating to anchorage and movements of vessels in St. Marys River;

S. 2452. An act creating an additional land office in the State of North Dakota; and

S. R. 7. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to present the bell of the late United States sloop of war Germantown to the Site and Relic Society, of Germantown, Pa.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a very brief bill, the bill (S. 5530) authorizing the procuring of additional land for the enlargement of the site for the public building at Kalamazoo, Mich. It will take but a moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I trust the Senator from Michigan will not try to press that bill. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who is not well, gave notice that he would want to finish his speech this morning. He is ready to proceed, and I hope the Senator will let the bill lie over until later.

Mr. BURROWS. If there is objection to it, I will not press it. It would not take over half a minute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Michigan.

REPORT ON BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a report on the progress of the beet-sugar industry in the United States in 1905. Your attention is respectfully invited to the accompanying letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, recommending that 10,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture, in addition to such number as may be desired for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 27, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be printed as a public document, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The question of printing 10,000 additional copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, in addition to the usual number, will be referred to the Committee on Printing; and the maps accompanying the message will be ordered printed, if there be no objection.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the unfinished business may be proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I thank the Senate for its indulgence, and I will take as little time to-day as will suffice to present a part only of what might properly be presented on this subject.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] seemed to think that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and myself were contending because of the distinction which we draw between judicial power and jurisdiction for some proposition which involved that the lesser shall be larger than the greater. I do not state his precise language. That suggestion, too, I think comes from a confusion of the distinction between judicial power and jurisdiction. Jurisdiction, as far as it refers to inferior courts of the United States, is a matter of legislation. The exercise of the judicial power where jurisdiction exists is judicial. The powers are utterly different; and therefore it can not be said that one is less or greater than the other.

Whether a case is made out before a court or judge which, according to the rules and established principles of equity entitle the litigant to a certain remedy, can not be a legislative question. That is essentially judicial. Will it be contended that the Congress can constitutionally enact a law prohibiting a party to a suit from applying to the court for a remedy, interlocutory, if you please, to which he conceives and which he is advised he is entitled? It would be practically a denial to the suitor if the Congress can control the exercise of judicial power, of the constitutional right of submitting to the chancellor on full hearing the question whether he is or is not entitled to the interlocutory remedy which he seeks.

Suppose this proviso were recast and prohibited a party complainant in a bill filed under the provisions of the Senator's amendment, if it were adopted, to apply to the court for an order maintaining the status quo, even though he made it plain to the court that otherwise irremedial loss would ensue, would that be legislation? Would it especially be legislation constitutionally enacted under the fifth amendment?

I have a right—every man has a right who is a party to a litigation—to make such application or motion to the court as he may be advised is within established usage in equity or at law, and whether the petition should be granted or denied, whether the remedy should be afforded or withheld, it does not seem to me can be made a legislative question.

The Senator from Texas seemed in his speech to have a consciousness that his proviso might be going too far, and his instinct for the law is excelled by that of no man whom I know. I do not mean by that that his legal knowledge is not abundant. He said:

> I am willing to leave with the court the right to say how it shall decide these cases—

From my standpoint that is not an option to be exercised by the Congress—> and I only ask Congress to say when it shall decide them. I do not say—and it would be a nullity if Congress were to so say in any statute—that the courts shall decide these cases for the Commission or for the railroads.

Is that the Ultima Thule? Is that the limit of Congressional power? May the legislature go that far and no farther, or go up to that line and be free to limit, hamper, and control the judicial power in all the territory this side of the final decree? It seems to me that proposition refutes itself.

> I ask Congress to exercise no power like that, because I know that to be a judicial power.

What is the "power" to be exercised, when the Senator from Texas, on a bill filed for foreclosure, asks for the appointment of a receiver by the chancellor on the presentation of facts which under established usage authorizes such an order? Is not that a judicial power? The power to preserve the property pending the litigation has been inherent in the chancellor from time immemorial.

> I only ask Congress to say that the court shall not decide these cases at all until it is ready to decide them right, and, according to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that is a legislative power.

I think that must be an error.

> I am willing to write it in the law that Congress disclaims the power to say how the court shall decide any case, provided that it also be written that the court shall not decide a case under this law at all until it is ready to decide it right.

A great many questions arise, matters of right as well as matters resting in the sound discretion of the court, pending the proceeding and before the court is ready to decide it "right" or "wrong," and many of those preliminary motions and applications and the power to grant them have been part of the equitable administration and jurisdiction for over two hundred years. The decision of any one of them involves absolutely the exercise of judicial power. Is not the "faculty of judgment" in passing upon all applications and motions of necessity as completely exempt from legislative control and dictation as the final decision upon the merits? How would it do to write this disclaimer at the end of the Senator's proviso?

> Provided, however, That no rate or charge, regulation or practice prescribed by the Commission shall be set aside or suspended by any preliminary or interlocutory decree or order of the court: Provided further, That Congress disclaims any power to dictate to the court what decision it shall make upon any motion or application in accordance with the established principles and procedure in equity properly brought before it in the progress of any such suit in equity.

The first proviso is the Senator's. The second my proposed one to test the soundness of his position.

Obviously the Senator's proviso and mine would eat each other up; and yet, Mr. President, under the Senator's proviso, if the carrier should satisfy the court that the rate fixed by the Commission is absolutely confiscatory, the court would be deprived of the faculty of judgment upon the subject and denied the power to exercise the function which, I say, inheres in the judicial power of a court. Congress, without any knowledge, would be in the attitude of saying by legislative enactment—as unyielding and arbitrary as anything that could be imagined—that, no matter what should be made to appear to the court in such a case, it should not have the power to suspend the order upon any terms, not even if every dollar received by the carrier was paid into the registry of the court to abide the result of the litigation, and notwithstanding the fact that it was perfectly apparent to the court that the loss to the party complainant would be otherwise irremediable.

Is it possible that Congress can substitute its judgment in such a proceeding for the judgment of the court? This is not a mere rule of practice, Mr. President. Practice and procedure do not generally reach the heart of jurisprudence; and if, under the guise of regulating practice and procedure, the essential and vital jurisdiction in equity is impinged, the court would hold that beyond the power, I think, of the legislature.

RIGHT ARM OF EQUITY.

Equity, it was said one day here, acts in rem. The maxim which comes down to us is, "Equity acts in personam, not in rem." The judgment at common law is satisfied out of the property of the defeated litigant, but, save in few cases, the chancellor enforces his orders and decrees against the person. He constrains the conscience by orders and writs, and punishment for disobedience.

Mr. President, injunction is called, and has been called for over two hundred and fifty years, I think, the "right arm of equity." Without it how could the fundamental power in equity to afford preventive relief be accorded?

Injunction, temporary or permanent, is not a mere instrumentality. Disobedience of it is punished as contempt, which is inherent at the common law; and our Supreme Court has held it is inherent in all courts. (In re Debs, 158 U. S., 564.) Equity is full of instrumentalities. Some of them, Mr. President, are almost vital to the exercise of the jurisdiction in equity; but the injunction is the "right arm of equity." It is not a mere instrumentality. It is a part of the body of equity jurisprudence. This glass in my hand is an instrumentality. The arm is a part of my body; and if it lies within the power of Congress to cut off the right arm of the body of equity jurisprudence, it rests in the power of Congress to cut off the left, and if it may cut off both arms, it may cut off the head and leave nothing of the equity jurisprudence recognized and established by the Constitution but an armless and headless trunk.

If the Senator is right, if Congress may exercise the power for which he contends, then Congress may say to a chancellor, "You shall not, whatever case may be presented to you arising under this law—not under another, but under this law—even though essential justice demands it, suspend an order and maintain the existing status upon terms which you think to be just or upon terms which may be prescribed by the statute." I do not believe, on the strength of the authorities which I partly read yesterday, that it is in the power of Congress to take away from the inferior courts of the United States by valid enactment any process necessary to the exercise of its jurisdiction. Admit that the jurisdiction might be withdrawn, but with the jurisdiction existing under an act of Congress, I believe it to be incompetent for Congress to emasculate the judicial power by depriving the court of the power to carry out its judgments and decrees.

Congress tried that experiment, Mr. President, in the Klein case (13 Wall., 128). I referred to it on a former occasion. The Congress has apparently as unlimited power, under the Constitution, over the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court as it has over any other subject. The Congress has the power to make such exceptions under the Constitution as it may see fit and to regulate the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court; but the Congress can not give it jurisdiction and yet withhold it. It can not give jurisdiction and dictate at the same time how the court shall exercise the judicial power. That was attempted by Congress. By act of Congress the Supreme Court was ordered on appeal, when certain facts appeared to the court, to dismiss the appeal. The court said about it—and I will not take time to restate the case; it is familiar here, for I read it here on another occasion—

> It is evident from this statement that the denial of jurisdiction to this court, as well as to the Court of Claims, is founded solely on the application of a rule of decision, in causes pending, prescribed by Congress.
> The court has jurisdiction of the cause to a given point; but when it ascertains that a certain state of things exists, its jurisdiction is to cease, and it is required to dismiss the cause for want of jurisdiction.
> The court is required to ascertain the existence of certain facts and thereupon to declare that its jurisdiction on appeal has ceased by dismissing the bill. What is this but to prescribe a rule for the decision of a cause in a particular way?

And the Supreme Court held the proviso invalid.

> In the case before us the Court of Claims has rendered judgment for the claimant and an appeal has been taken to this court. We are directed to dismiss the appeal, if we find that the judgment must be affirmed, because of a pardon granted to the interstate of the claimants. Can we do so without allowing one party to the controversy to decide it in its own favor? Can we do so without allowing that the legislature may prescribe rules of decision to the judicial department of the Government in cases pending before it?

What does the proviso to the amendment of the Senator from Texas do but prescribe the rule of decision to the court of equity on application made in accordance with established equitable principles for an order maintaining the status quo? It is simply a legislative mandate that every such application as that shall be decided, regardless of the facts, for the Government. I can not believe that that is within the constitutional capacity of the Congress. The Senator from Texas believes otherwise. That is a difference of opinion.

Mr. BAILEY rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not mean to say——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, I do not believe that Congress could command the court to decide a question in favor of the Government. If the Senator from Wisconsin——

Mr. SPOONER. I say "in effect;" I did not say that the——

Mr. BAILEY. The words "in effect" escaped me.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say "in effect." There is no Senator who heard me who did not understand what I meant.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, I heard the Senator, and I did not understand that he meant that, or I should not have interrupted him.

Mr. SPOONER. I say that would be the effect of this proviso; but the Senator does not think so.

Mr. BAILEY. Ah! If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me——

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. My contention is that the courts shall have no jurisdiction over that, just as if I should say the courts shall have no jurisdiction over a case involving less than $2,000. To say that the court shall not decide that question at all, because of a lack of jurisdiction to decide, is one thing; to say that the court may have jurisdiction to decide it and shall decide it in favor of either the plaintiff or the defendant is, to my mind, quite a different thing.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, that is a new distinction; that is a theory of which I have not heretofore been advised. I have supposed that a court, in order to exercise the judicial power of the Constitution, must have jurisdiction—first, jurisdiction over the subject-matter; second, jurisdiction over the parties. I have never been taught that a court could have jurisdiction over the subject-matter and jurisdiction over the parties, and yet be prohibited from doing, in the exercise of judicial power in that case, what justice demands and what is in accordance with the established usages of the jurisprudence being administered. Test that. If the Congress may clip off a part of the jurisdiction which the court has in the case so as to prevent the court from hearing and deciding a preliminary motion, where must the Congress stop? Congress has a right, then, to cut off enough of the jurisdiction, or, in better words, judicial power—for everything the court does, Mr. President, where it has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, is the exercise of judicial power, and involves the faculty of judgment to leave a third or half of a case. On the Senator's theory it is competent for Congress to provide, splitting up the jurisdiction, that in a class of causes the court shall make no decision upon any question or proposition arising in the progress of the suit except the final decree.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; always.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, probably I can make the issue between the Senator and myself even more definite than he has made it up to this point. I not only affirm that Congress can, to borrow his expression, clip off a part of a jurisdiction here and there, but I affirm that Congress can completely deny all jurisdiction.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Not only can it take a part and another part and another part, as the Senator expresses it, but the Congress is entirely competent to declare that no circuit court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to entertain any particular kind of suit that the wisdom of Congress may choose to exclude, and if it can exclude all jurisdiction I think there is no difficulty in concluding that it may exclude partial jurisdiction.

THE REAL QUESTION.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am not called upon to deny the broad statement which the Senator makes that the Congress can withdraw all jurisdiction from the circuit courts of the United States. I am not called upon, either, to deny that the Congress can withdraw part of the jurisdiction from the circuit courts of the United States and the district courts of the United States over a class or classes of cases enumerated in the Constitution. I am not called upon to deny that the Congress may withhold, or, if having conferred, it may withdraw, jurisdiction over habeas corpus as a prerogative writ as contradistinguished from the ancillary writ or writs essential to the exercise of the jurisdiction. I am not called upon to deny that the Congress may withdraw jurisdiction from the courts over mandamus upon the same basis. I am not claiming, Mr. President, nor need I, that the Congress, having conferred jurisdiction upon the circuit courts of the United States over almost all of the enumerated cases in the Constitution, can not withdraw one jurisdiction and another and another and another. But that is not the question. The question is whether Congress, having conferred jurisdiction upon an inferior court over a class of cases, and not withdrawing that jurisdiction over that class of cases, can, where a case falling within the class is before the court, subdivide that jurisdiction over the one case. I deny it. Congress can confer jurisdiction over a case or it can refuse to confer it, but, Mr. President, when Congress does confer it, the judicial power of the Constitution goes with it as to that particular case, and Congress can not take away, in my judgment, from the court in that case or in cases of that class, the power to hear motions or applications and to decide them as the court thinks fit, subject to correction by the circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court of the United States.

If Congress may not only clip off the judicial power, but may give the court jurisdiction of a case and take away part of the jurisdiction over that case, what is left? The result of that would simply be this, I think, and that I believe is what this amendment would accomplish: I believe the court would say that it is such an attempted impairment of the jurisdiction that it could not assume it or exercise judicial power under it. I do not believe a court of the United States, sanctioned by the Supreme Court, would deem it possible to take half of the jurisdiction of the Constitution over a particular lawsuit. I think it must be withheld over the particular case or given to the constitutional extent.

There is where the Senator and I run against each other again. We agree up to a certain point. We agree as to the power of the Congress to confer so much of the constitutional jurisdiction over the enumerated cases of the Constitution as it may deem wise. We admit that it may be withdrawn, but if the Senator contends that the jurisdiction over the enumerated cases may be given to the court, and the judicial power as to a case within the class can be split in two, I can not see any earthly foundation upon which to support that contention.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. The construction of the word "jurisdiction" and the term "judicial power" constitutes a point at issue, as I understand, between the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator from Texas contends that "jurisdiction" and "judicial power" are interchangeable terms, practically synonymous terms.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to interrupt him there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CARTER. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not want to be put in the position of saying that there is no distinction between them at any time or under any circumstances. My statement was that they are the same when applied to a question like that under consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. I conceded that the Senator had made that qualification.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that to be a fact, and will be glad to follow so as to confine the Senator's express understanding to the particular matter under consideration.

As I understand the issue at this moment being considered, the Senator from Wisconsin falls into what I deem the error of the Senator from Texas, to wit, disregarding the plain distinction between "jurisdiction" and "judicial power." The persons and the subject-matter being within the jurisdiction of the court by proper legal authority, it is proposed by this amendment, not to limit the jurisdiction, but to enter the court room, where the jurisdiction over persons and subject-matter is complete, and there prescribe what the court shall or shall not do with reference to an ancient and well-established course of proceeding in equity.

Therefore I submit to the Senator from Wisconsin that this is an invasion of the judicial power, and has nothing whatever to do with the jurisdiction, which presumably is complete.

Mr. SPOONER. If I did not draw that distinction I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I thought I had that distinction pretty thoroughly embodied by this time in my mind, and that either from intellectual firmness or intellectual stubbornness nobody could eliminate it from my constitution. But if in the haste of debate I did not recognize it the Senator is right, and I thank him.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the Senator to say that the Senator from Texas proposed to divide and subdivide jurisdiction. The Senator from Texas concedes that the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter and the parties would be complete.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; by his amendment. In the heat of debate I very likely used "jurisdiction" where I should have used "judicial power." It must be very apparent from the argument I have made here that I should have used the term "judicial power."

Mr. CARTER. I understood that.

Mr. SPOONER. Because Congress can not give jurisdiction and yet not give it, and where Congress does give jurisdiction Congress can not emasculate the judicial power, or deprive the court of the right to exercise the whole of the judicial power in a given case. The Constitution says: "The judicial power shall extend to all cases," etc. It means the whole of any case over which it is given jurisdiction, not part of the case.

Now, Mr. President, neither the Senator from Texas nor I can find any decision of the Supreme Court upon this question. I should not say, perhaps, that he can not, but I know of none. It has never been presented to the Supreme Court, as I understand it. We can only reason upon general principles and analogies. That it is impossible for Congress to give jurisdiction to a court over a class of cases and yet withhold the full judicial power over cases within that class of cases, or over a single case falling within the class of cases, I think is too plain for debate.

It is a matter of congratulation that in the history of this country, during the last fifty years at least, and perhaps more, there have been rare instances, even in the States, of attempts by the legislature to interfere with the exercise of judicial power as contradistinguished from jurisdiction. Now and then such things have happened. It happened once in California as to tide lands, lands which lay between high and low tide.

On the 18th day of May, 1853, the legislature of California passed an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the interest of the State of California in the property within the water-line front of the city of San Francisco." The defendants, in pursuance with the terms of the act, were duly appointed commissioners to examine into and make sale of such interest, and, as such, advertised the property of the plaintiff for sale, in order to satisfy whatever interest the State of California might have therein.

The case was submitted to a referee to report upon the facts, who found that at one time the land in dispute was for the most part below high-water mark, but before the State of California was admitted into the Union the same had been wholly reclaimed and was covered with buildings and a part used as public highways. That the title of the plaintiffs was derived from grants—

Which I need not read.

Upon this state of facts the court granted a perpetual injunction, as aforesaid.

The act prescribed that no injunction should be issued against the commissioners appointed for the sale of the State interest within the water line, and the court said, dealing with this point:

The legislature can not exercise judicial functions, and therefore can not except one case, or one party, from the operation of a general rule of law, either as to right or remedy. That portion, therefore, of the act of May, 1853, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the interest of the State of California in the property within the water line," etc., which prescribes that no injunction shall be issued against the commissioners is invalid. (Guy et al. v. Hermance et al., 5 Cal. (Morris).)

They treated it as a legislative interference with judicial power.

Mr. RAYNER. That was a case of final injunction.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; final injunction. Why may not the legislature, or Congress deal with final injunction as well as with preliminary injunction where it is absolutely necessary to justice, and where the right to grant it in proper case is inherent in the court. Why may not Congress in this case, if it may provide that no injunction shall issue pending final decree, provide that no injunction shall issue pending a final determination by the Supreme Court of the United States of the constitutionality of the rate?

Congress has control over supersedeas. Why may it not go that far if it may begin? It is only attempted here to confer through delegation the power of Congress upon this Commission. Suppose Congress should pass an act prohibiting the carriage of freight from San Francisco to New York at a higher rate than one-quarter of what is now charged and providing that no injunction shall be granted to suspend operations under that law until the Supreme Court of the United States shall have passed upon its constitutionality; would that be valid? It would not be applicable only to one case. It would be applicable to a class of cases. In other words, Mr. President, if Congress in any case may constitutionally supplant the judgment of the court by the mandate of legislation, it is for Congress to draw the line where it will stop.

It was tried in Wisconsin some years ago. I can not take the time to read the case. It applied to the driving of piles in Rock River, Wisconsin. It was enacted that—

It shall be unlawful and presumptively injurious to persons and property to drive piles, build piers, cribs, or other structures * * * in Rock River within the limits of the county of Rock, and the doing of any such act shall be enjoined at the suit of any resident taxpayer without proof that any injury or danger has been or will be caused by reason of such act.

* * * * * * *

The doing of any such act shall also be enjoined at the suit of any owner or lessee of the right to use water of said river to operate any mill or factory within said county, without proof of any further fact than that such act will cause the water of said river to rise or set back, to some extent, at the place where the water used to operate such mill or factory is discharged into said river.

Why not? That would only be a rule of evidence, would it not? Or would it be more than that? The moment one leaves the beaten track, the moment one forgets that the Constitution created the judiciary a coordinate, equal, and independent branch of this Government, we get into the fog and we get into danger. It might be a rule of decision.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] seemed to think I would exalt the judiciary over the legislative department. I would not. Although the judiciary is to decide upon its jurisdiction, and if it decides wrong in the court of last resort there is above that no court for the correction of the error, I would keep the Congress within the limitations of the Constitution. I would as zealously protect the power and the sovereignty of the States against Congressional invasion as I would protect the power and jurisdiction of Congress against invasion by any other body. I would not consent to assign to the judiciary any other position relatively to the other departments of the Government than that assigned to it by the Constitution, but I do insist that that assigned to it by the Constitution neither nor both of the other branches of the Government can take away from it.

When Congress enacts that in a certain class of cases like the cases covered by the Senator's amendment no injunction shall be granted pending final decree, Congress, to all intents and purposes, decides that justice will not and can not demand, pending final decree, the granting of an injunction. The conclusive legislative presumption is against it. So it does not much differ in effect from this case, from which I will briefly read. I hope some Senator will point out the distinction between the power of Congress to say that an injunction shall not be granted by the court and to say that an injunction in cases which Congress designates shall be granted by the courts in classes of cases. The court said:

> The legislature usurped the judicial power of the courts by the enactment of this statute. It adjudicates an act unlawful and presumptively injurious and dangerous, which is not and can not be made to be so without a violation of the constitutional rights of the defendant, and imperatively commands the court to enjoin it without proof that any injury or danger has been or will be caused by it.
> It reverses very many decisions of this court on the very questions involved in it, and which have the effect of a judicial determination of the defendant's rights of property.
> It takes away the jurisdiction of the courts to inquire into the facts and determine the necessity and propriety of granting or refusing an injunction in such a case, according to the established rules of a court of equity.

Let me read that again. It should say the "power"—

> It takes away the jurisdiction of the courts to inquire into the facts and determine the necessity and propriety of granting or refusing an injunction in such a case, according to the established rules of a court of equity. (City of Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis., 288.)

Just as this proviso, if enacted into law, would require the court to deny preliminary injunction, no matter if the duty to issue it, from a judicial standpoint, is as plain as Holy Writ.

I will say to the Senator from Texas—I spoke to him about it once—that there is a case in California (I do not remember the report; I looked at it once hurriedly; it seemed so involved with the code and the constitution of California that I did not get back to it) which seemed to me might sustain his proposition. It is Spreckels v. The Hawaiian Commercial Company. He can look it up, or I will look it up.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I could have found a number of State cases, but the Senator from Wisconsin knows as well as I do that there is scarcely a controverted question in this country which has not been decided both ways by the various State courts, and I did not think it worth the while, I did not think it would enlighten the Senate, to produce here the conflicting decisions of State courts on the same question. Even questions that appear plain to us sometimes as many as thirty supreme courts have decided one way and eight or twelve have decided the other.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think there has ever been very much difference of opinion between State courts on a question like this.

Mr. BAILEY. Because this particular question has not often been presented. But the Senator will agree with my general statement, that there is scarcely a question presented for judicial determination in the States that different courts have not decided opposite ways.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know about that. I think I can remember a great many matters upon which there has been almost universal concurrence among the courts of the States. Many of the courts of the States have been illustrious, and there have been on the supreme bench and on the circuit bench in the States a great number of judges whose opinions upon questions of law I would value as highly as any opinion ever delivered in this country. And so, on a general principle like this, where there is no decision of the Supreme Court upon it, and where one must be guided by analogy, I think the Senator and I are at liberty to avail ourselves of the opinions of the State courts.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not want to be put in the attitude of underestimating the State courts, and I think it is no reflection on them that they see the same question in different lights. I only need to remind the Senator from Wisconsin that the Supreme Court of the United States within the last four years has decided almost every important question before it by a vote of 5 to 4. It is no impeachment of their ability or integrity that that is true. Neither do I intend it as any reflection upon the State courts when I say that they have decided the same question opposite ways.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not intend to imply that the Senator disparaged in any way the judiciary of the States, of course.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all I care to say upon the general proposition. While I can not speak ex cathedra, nor can any Senator do so, I have an abiding conviction that on general principles this proviso can not constitutionally be enacted.

ARGUMENT AGAINST MY CONTENTION.

I come now to the argument of the Senator from Texas, and, first and briefly, I wish to notice some strictures which that Senator thought proper to pass upon the fairness of a portion of the speech I delivered on a former day. I have seen it stated in newspapers that issued about the time of the Senator's speech that a portion of my speech contained misquotations from decisions. I heard no such imputation from the Senator. Such a statement could not be maintained for a moment by a cursory reading even of the speech. The Senator from Texas, while criticising a portion of my speech delivered on the first day as misleading, acquitted me of any conscious purpose to mislead the Senate.

It is now thirty-eight years since I began the practice of my profession, which with zeal I pursued during those years except while I have been a member of the Senate. I was taught the law, Mr. President, by a great lawyer, a modest man, of sensitive honor, long since dead, who taught me as the first lesson which a lawyer should learn and never forget, that he is an officer of the court, bound to be frank and fair always with the court, and, subject to that, the advocate of the interest of the client. Never in my life have I forgotten it. The two Senators from Minnesota knew him and both loved him and revered him. I never have failed to bring to the attention of the court an adverse decision when I found it, nor have I ever nor could I ever omit to read from an opinion what seemed adverse to the proposition for which I was contending. My purpose is simply to show——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Wisconsin says that I acquitted him from any design to mislead the Senate. I did that, as I recall now, in two different places. I want to say, in justice to him, that I believe him incapable of attempting to deceive either the courts, as he says now, or the Senate, as I say for him. I believe him incapable of attempting to deceive anybody by garbling or misquoting the authorities.

I wish to say, inasmuch as the Senator has referred to it in the open Senate, what I have said to my friends in private conversation, and that is, that so far as any criticism was justified—and I think it was justified against the Senator from Wisconsin—it was due to the fact that he had not examined those cases for himself, but that, under the great pressure upon us all here, he had relied upon somebody else to examine them for him, and that they had not been examined with that care which the Senator from Wisconsin would have employed if he had examined them for himself.

In view of all that has been said in the public prints and in view of what the Senator says, I think that statement ought to be made before the subject passes from us.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senate very briefly that in my opinion neither, if consciously or unconsciously uttered, could anything I said mislead the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. If I am mistaken in thinking the Senator from Wisconsin had those cases examined by some one for him, I desire to withdraw the explanation I made.

Mr. SPOONER. What did the Senator say?

Mr. BAILEY. I said, if I am mistaken——

Mr. SPOONER. I want to show that a fair construction of my speech will show that what I said constituted no predicate for the charge that the extracts were misleading. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; and of course I am perfectly willing to meet that, if it is to become a subject of discussion. But I do not want to make a statement as to the course pursued by a brother Senator if I am mistaken about it; and if the Senator examined those authorities for himself, waiving the question whether the extracts were misleading or not, I want to withdraw the explanation which I have made to my friends in private conversation and the explanation which I have offered now.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I never asked any man's silence about me, nor shall I. I propose to maintain, if I can, and I would leave that to a jury composed entirely of manly enemies—I would leave it to the Senator from Texas, who is not my enemy, although he drew inferences which he thought were justified from what he found in my speech, that the matters to which he called attention are not justly subject to such criticism.

First, the Senator criticised as misleading what I read from Julian v. Central National Bank (169 U. S., 432) in connection with my observations upon the power of courts, notwithstanding section 720, Revised Statutes, to issue injunctions restraining proceedings in State courts.

The cases cited in the extract which I read are in the opinion of the Supreme Court sustaining the proposition announced. I did not examine the cases cited in the opinion. I assumed that the Supreme Court could be relied upon to cite cases which support the doctrine which the court announces. I read first a statement of the case from the syllabus, and then I read connectedly the statement of the court as to the power of Federal courts to issue injunctions enjoining proceedings in State courts. I also stated that the rule always has been that where the Federal courts first acquired jurisdiction it issued such injunctions as were necessary to protect the jurisdiction first acquired and so it has been.

It never occurred to me that anyone could draw from my remarks or the language I quoted from the court an inference that it involved the proposition that section 720 is unconstitutional. I had admitted the binding force of the section in another part of the speech and had justified it, claiming that it was not at all antagonistic to my contention, for reasons which I do not take time to repeat. I could not for a moment imagine that anyone could fancy even that I cited the Julian case as an authority for the contention that section 720, prohibiting Federal courts from enjoining proceedings in State courts, is unconstitutional, because I knew that for one hundred and thirteen years that statute has been in existence and obeyed, and that it was sustained thirteen or fourteen years after its enactment by the Supreme Court of the United States. For the life of me I can not see, on reviewing that part of my speech, where anything can be found in it justifying the suggestion that it was misleading, and I pass that.

The Senator then commented on Mr. Justice Story's "essay," as he termed it, in Martin v. Hunter's Lessees, I Wheat., 304. It is only fair for me to say that I did not make that extract. I asked a lawyer friend of mine, as I was not able to use my eyes at night, to run down some authorities for me, and that was sent to me, typewritten and italicized, as was the extract from Ex parte Crane.

The elaborate quotation from Mr. Justice Story's opinion, although interesting, is quite irrelevant, and, moreover, emphasizes his opinion that Congress was bound to confer all of the judicial power upon the inferior courts, when I had conceded early in my speech that that is not the law. I had said, on page 4, if the Senator has it before him:

> I concede, under the decisions, of course, that the circuit and district courts of the United States are statutory courts; that they do not derive their jurisdiction immediately from the Constitution. They are created by Congress. Their jurisdiction is to be found in the legislation of Congress. For many years Congress withheld from their jurisdiction a large number of cases or controversies enumerated in the Constitution. That Congress could lawfully do this I do not question.

A part of Mr. Justice Story's opinion quoted asserts the contrary doctrine. So a part of the extract from Ex parte Crane asserts a contrary doctrine, the italics in neither case being mine.

But, Mr. President, that certainly could mislead no one who reads the speech with any care or who reads it without unfriendliness, as I know the Senator read it.

There is one part in Mr. Justice Story's opinion upon which I relied, and one only. The extract led up to it, and inserting stars, not to make it too long, and to call attention to the fact that something was omitted, I quoted the language, putting it in small caps to emphasize it in the strongest possible way as the language to which I particularly desired to call attention:

> BUT EVEN ADMITTING THAT THE LANGUAGE OF THE CONSTITUTION IS NOT MANDATORY, AND THAT CONGRESS MAY CONSTITUTIONALLY OMIT TO VEST THE JUDICIAL POWER IN COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES, IT CAN NOT BE DENIED THAT WHEN IT IS VESTED IT MAY BE EXERCISED TO THE UTMOST CONSTITUTIONAL EXTENT.

The statement in my speech on the first day that "it was dissented from only by one justice, and not by any as to the portion of it which declares specifically the law to be as I am contending for it" was too broad, which is apt to occur to one who frames his sentences as he utters them, as I do. I referred to Mr. Justice Johnson, whose opinion was a concurring not a dissenting opinion, as having criticised some of the reasoning of Mr. Justice Story. The point which I had in my mind, as emphasized above, he did not criticise. On the next day I quoted again that clause of the opinion, and it only, thus:

> Mr. President, I put against all comers on this question the statement of Mr. Justice Story in the case to which I called attention yesterday—Martin v. Hunter, reported in 1 Wheaton—at the end of an elaborate argument on the construction of the judicial clauses of the Constitution:
> That was one of the first opinions of the Supreme Court on the construction of the judicial clauses of the Constitution. It found its way in extenso into Judge Story's Commentaries upon the Constitution. No one of the great judges who sat with him on that bench, save Mr. Justice Johnson, criticised anything in that opinion. It is not to be supposed that Chief Justice Marshall was not familiar with it; that Mr. Justice Washington was not familiar with it; that Mr. Justice Livingston was not familiar with it; and had it not met their concurrence it is sure, from the practice of the judges of that day, that the dissent from its argument, even if its conclusions were approved, would have found its way into the reports. Mr. Justice Johnson criticised a portion of the opinion, ALTHOUGH NOT THAT PORTION OF IT.

My statement the second day, that "Mr. Justice Johnson criticised a portion of the opinion, although not that portion of it," could only be construed, I think, as referring to the five lines from Mr. Justice Story's opinion, which I had just quoted for the second time. It was that quotation to which I referred when I said that Mr. Justice Johnson criticised a portion of the opinion, although not that portion of it. In fact, Mr. Justice Johnson did not criticise that portion of it, and in his opinion in the case of the Resource he announced the same doctrine, and that is the doctrine for which I have been contending to-day, and it is a statement the accuracy of which I have never seen or heard anywhere impeached before that when Congress does vest the judicial power in courts of the United States, "it can not be denied that it may be exercised to the utmost constitutional extent."

The Senator says I did not state the point of the decision. That is true. I would have assumed that to lawyers it was not necessary to state the point of the decision in Martin v. Hunter's lessee. The Senator has used many extracts from cases without stating the point of the decision. I hunted up the cases to which he referred in his first speech to determine how far the language which he quoted was obiter and how far it was a part of the ratio decidendi.

As to the extract from Ex parte Crane. The Senator said it was so phrased at the outset, thus: "It is said by Mr. Justice Baldwin in Ex parte Crane" (5 Peters, 190–192), as to lead any lawyer to suppose it was the opinion of the court. Possibly that is so. I should not so regard it. That was part of the extract sent to me. It has been my habit to say "the court says," or "Mr. Justice—speaking for the court—says." Other lawyers may do differently, and it may be that the Senator is right; but while the extract is utterly irrelevant to any contention in my speech, while it asserts his opinion to be in accord with that of Mr. Justice Story, which I had conceded not to be the law, the extract carries on its face indubitable evidence, so that it could not mislead anybody, that he regarded his opinion as against the uniform decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the subject. Let me read it. It is brief:

> Though the courts of the United States are capable of exercising the whole judicial power as conferred by the Constitution, and though Congress are bound to provide by law for its exercise in all cases to which that judicial power extends—

Those were not my italics—

> YET IT HAS NOT BEEN DONE, AND MUCH OF IT REMAINS DORMANT FOR THE WANT OF LEGISLATION TO ENABLE THE COURTS TO EXERCISE IT, IT HAVING BEEN REPEATEDLY AND UNIFORMLY DECIDED BY THIS COURT THAT LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ARE INDISPENSABLE TO GIVE EFFECT TO A POWER TO BRING INTO ACTION THE CONSTITUTIONAL JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME AND INFERIOR COURTS.

I think the Senator will on reflection not feel justified in saying what he says in one part of his speech as to this extract.

The Senator quotes this, which he thought ought to have been added. I submit to him that it adds nothing to the evidence afforded by the extract in my speech that the decisions of the Supreme Court had been uniformly against the proposition that all the judicial power must be vested in inferior courts of the United States.

> These principles remain unquestioned. They have long been settled, as the judicial exposition of the Constitution, on solemn argument and the gravest consideration; and they are binding on all courts and judges. I shall ever be found among the last to oppose my opinion in opposition to the results of the deliberate judgment of the highest tribunal when thus formed. (Ex parte Crane, 5 Peters, 30 U. S. Reports, 202.)

And there was much more in the same line of thought which the Senator could have added, but if the Senator will place that alongside the extract found in my speech I know he will say that it adds nothing to the extract except the declaration of the justice's devotion to duty and his obligation, although differing from the court on that subject, to stand by the decisions of the court. The Senator said:

> The Senator from Wisconsin gave the Senate the benefit of Judge Baldwin's opinion upon the political duty of Congress to invest the court with the whole judicial power of the Government, but he neglected to give the Senate the benefit of Judge Baldwin's admission that the court had not taken the same view of the question which he expressed.

Is that so?

I do not intend in saying this to insinuate that the Senator from Wisconsin designed to mislead the Senate.

Of course the Senator would not insinuate that, but on the merits of the matter is it so that the extract which I read did not inform anyone that the uniform decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States had been just as he states in different language in what the Senator added? I regret that it is there, Mr. President, not because it is misleading, but because it is irrelevant and a blemish in the speech.

The Senator also criticised me with reference to the extract from the Wheeling Bridge case. (13 How., 518.) I do not think the criticism a just one, although I know perfectly well that the Senator would consciously do me no injustice. I quoted the following:

In exercising this jurisdiction the courts of the Union are not limited by the chancery system adopted in any State, and they exercise their functions in a State where no court of chancery has been established. The usages of the high court of chancery in England, wherever the jurisdiction is exercised, govern the proceedings. This may be said to be the common law of chancery, and since the organization of the Government it has been observed.

* * * * * * *

Under this system, where relief can be given by the English chancery similar relief may be given by the courts of the United States.

The Senator complains that I omitted the following:

In Robinson v. Campbell (3 Wheat., 222) it is said: "The court therefore think that, to effectuate the purposes of the legislature, the remedies in the courts of the United States are to be at common law or in equity, not according to the practice of State courts, but according to the principles of common law and equity, as distinguished and defined in that country from which we derive our knowledge of those principles."

And also contends that there should have been inserted before the sentence quoted, after the stars, the words:

By the act of Congress of 1828, proceedings at law, in the courts of the United States, are required to conform to the modes of proceeding in the State courts; but there is no such provision in regard to courts of chancery.

The extract from the Robinson case might well have been inserted; it is a stronger exposition of the proposition I was making, which was simply to put before the Senate the relation of the equity jurisprudence of this country to the system administered in England when the Constitution was adopted than was the extract which I quoted.

The reference to the act of Congress of 1828 would seem to be of no relevancy whatever. Out of abundance of caution, as I always do, I inserted stars, to advise anyone who might read it that there was an omission. Could either omission mislead anyone? It did not and does not occur to me so.

I think every lawyer knows that over a hundred years ago Congress conformed the proceedings at law in the Federal courts to the proceedings at law in the States, and that it has never made any such provision as to equity for one good reason that in some of the States they had abolished the distinction between law and equity, and in one State, I think, the State of Louisiana, they never had any such distinction. Nor could any inference be drawn from it at all upon the questions which we are contesting, for I never have contended for a moment that Congress might not change the practice and modes of procedure in equity not affecting the essential principles and remedies of the system.

I believe that is the end of the criticisms made by the Senator. I refer to them because there went out the imputation that there was concealment and unfairness in it, a thing of which I hold myself incapable.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to incorporate into the Senator's speech in this connection my language, to show just how careful I was against making a direct criticism against him in reference to section 720. I want to call his attention to the fact that I said:

To say that, "notwithstanding this plain prohibition"—

And I put that in quotation marks to indicate that it was taken from the Senator's speech—the courts had granted the injunction, might mean that the Supreme Court had held that injunctions could be granted contrary to the provisions of that law, and this would seem to imply a doubt as to the constitutional power of Congress over the subject.

So the Senate will see that I was very careful indeed.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does not claim that the quotation from the opinion of the court was not accurate.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no.

Mr. SPOONER. Nor does he contend that there was anything in the decision pertinent to the subject which was not given.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. But the Senator finds it in one of the cases cited in the opinion, as I understand it——

Mr. BAILEY. Upon which that was based.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not look at that. I assumed that the Supreme Court would refer to no decisions which did not sustain their proposition. Moreover, it never entered by mind that anybody could infer from anything I had said that there is any doubt whatever about the constitutionality of section 720.

Mr. BAILEY. I read the Senator's speech while I was returning to Washington on the train, and when I read that part of it it created upon my mind the very impression that is created here, that it might mislead those who were not familiar with the cases upon which it was based.

Mr. SPOONER. I take it that that would be the fault of the Supreme Court, not mine.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not willing to accept that; but at any rate, remembering the very ground upon which the first decision was based, and the others following it, I thought it proper to put it in. I am doing this now for a double reason, first, as a matter of justice to myself to show that I do not recklessly accuse Senators of intending to mislead, and, next, to show in the Senator's own speech that I made no such charge against him in that respect.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator, I said, acquitted me of that.

Mr. BAILEY. I did expressly, and I used the words, if the Senator will refer to the speech, that will be calculated to mislead those who are not familiar with the case.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think a layman who read it would not draw that inference from it, and I am quite certain lawyers would not. At any rate, the proposition in my speech rests entirely upon the language of the Supreme Court of the United States which cited these decisions. The Senator as a lawyer knows that for one hundred and thirteen years section 720 has been in operation, many, many times dealt with, and never challenged as to its constitutionality. I think if the Senator had been discussing that question, which is purely a legal question, it would not have entered into his mind that a lawyer—a layman seldom reads decisions—could infer from anything said by the court that it intended to challenge the constitutionality of section 720.

That is all. I apologize for having said a personal word. I have wished to correct the impression which went out to some newspapers upon the subject. Now, Mr. President, I have done with it.

ANTI-INJUNCTION BILLS.

What does the Senator from Texas in his remarkable speech—remarkable in many ways—urge by way of precedent or authority against my contention? First, he cites the anti-injunction bills in Congress. I have been here for sixteen years, and I do not stop to spend any time upon the legislative history of the anti-injunction bills, which in a time of public excitement and passion and political disquiet have gone through one House or the other. Whatever as authority they are worth, my opponents upon this question are entitled to.

HABEAS CORPUS.

I come to the writ of habeas corpus. The Senator seems very largely to rely upon the fact that Congress has asserted its power to abridge the right of the courts to issue even "the great writ of liberty." Has the Congress ever abridged the power of the courts to issue the great writ of liberty? The Senator is usually extremely accurate. The Senator was not accurate, I think, in using the word "abridge." He would be if the courts possessed an inherent power to issue writs of habeas corpus; but they do not. That is a common-law writ. These are not common-law courts. I read what Chief Justice Marshall said in the Swartwout case (4 Cranch, 75); the Senator cited it and I will read but a word from it:

Courts which originate in the common law possess a jurisdiction which must be regulated by the common law, until some statute shall change their established principles; but courts which are created by written law, and whose jurisdiction is defined by written law, can not transcend that jurisdiction.

And he holds:

The reasoning from the bar, in relation to it, may be answered by the single observation, that for the meaning of the term habeas corpus, resort may unquestionably be had to the common law; but the power to award the writ by any of the courts of the United States must be given by written law.

I agree to that. So the failure of Congress to confer upon the courts jurisdiction over suits of habeas corpus, for it has been held to be a suit within the judicial power of the United States, does not abridge any power or right of the courts. It was a high prerogative writ. It simply withholds jurisdiction from the courts in one of the cases in which under the Constitution it might be conferred by the Congress. No prerogative writ, Mr. President, was brought across the seas by our forefathers to be inherited by the courts of the United States. That has been repeatedly established. Judge Betts, of New York, in an able opinion denying the writ in 1844 held, first, that a circuit court of the United States could not exercise the common-law functions of parens patriæ and had no common-law jurisdiction over the matter; second, that the court had not judicial cognizance of the matter by virtue of any statute of the United States. This was sound. The courts do not represent any sovereign in this country, Mr. President.

Mr. Justice Wilson, in Chisholm v. Georgia (2 Dall, 457), says:

To the Constitution of the United States the word "sovereign" is totally unknown. There is but one place where it could have been used with propriety. But even in that place it would not perhaps have comported with the delicacy of those who ordained and established that Constitution. They might have announced themselves "sovereign" people of the United States. But serenely conscious of the fact, they avoided the ostentatious declaration.

The inferior courts of the United States have no power to exercise jurisdiction in habeas corpus unless that power is conferred by law. Congress represents the only sovereign—the people. The power to issue prerogative writs in most of the States depends upon the acts of the legislature. The power to issue prerogative writs by the inferior courts depends upon the act of the Congress. But, Mr. President, the Congress of the United States was under constitutional duty to confer jurisdiction upon some court or courts of the United States to issue "the great writ of liberty." Whether Congress would do it or not was not a question between the courts and the Congress. Their failure to do it would not weaken at all the exercise of existing jurisdiction in the courts. It would not degrade in the slightest the courts any more than withholding jurisdiction in other matters in which it might be conferred affected the power of the court. Whether Congress should confer that power on the court is a question between the Congress and the people.

They gave early, over a hundred years ago, to the courts the right to issue the writ and all writs necessary to the exercise of their jurisdiction and in accordance with law. They gave within fair limits for the time, Mr. President, the right to issue the prerogative writ to inquire as to the validity of a commitment. They did not make it general. So far as they gave it, it could be exercised, and so far as they did not give it, it could not be exercised.

Chief Justice Marshall says:

It may be worthy of remark that this act was passed by the First Congress of the United States, sitting under a Constitution which had declared "that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus should not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety might require it."

Acting under the immediate influence of this injunction, they must have felt, with peculiar force, the obligation of providing efficient means by which this great constitutional privilege should receive life and activity; for if the means be not in existence, the privilege itself would be lost, although no law for its suspension should be enacted. Under the impression of this obligation they give to all the courts the power of awarding writs of habeas corpus. (Ex parte Bollman and Swartwout, 4 Cranch, 95.)

Habeas corpus is the privilege of the citizen, not a right of the courts.

MANDAMUS.

I need not repeat it, but all I have said as to habeas corpus is applicable also to the writ of mandamus. So far as it is a merely "judicial writ," essential to the exercise of jurisdiction, the power to issue it was conferred upon the courts of the United States by the judiciary act of 1789. It is a common-law writ, and essentially a high prerogative writ, called "one of the flowers of the King's bench," and issued alone out of the court of King's bench. If the right to issue the writ in any form could be said to inhere in any court of this country, it would certainly be in the common-law courts of general jurisdiction, existing in a State in which the common law had been adopted. Certainly the power to issue the writ would not exist in the courts of the United States unless conferred upon them by law.

It is said in Kendall v. United States (12 Pet., 619) by Mr. Justice Thompson, speaking for the court:

The theory of the British Government, and of the common law, is that the writ of mandamus is a prerogative writ, and is sometimes called one of the flowers of the Crown, and is therefore confided only to the King's bench, where the King, at one period of the judicial history of that country, is said to have sat in person, and is presumed still to sit. And the power to issue this writ is given to the King's bench only, as having the general supervising power over all inferior jurisdictions and officers, and is coextensive with judicial sovereignty. And the same theory prevails in our State governments, where the common law is adopted, and governs in the administration of justice; and the power of issuing this writ is generally confided to the highest court of original jurisdiction. But it can not be denied but this common-law principle may be modified by the legislature in any manner that may be deemed proper and expedient. No doubt the British Parliament might authorize the court of common pleas to issue this writ, or that the legislature of the States where this doctrine prevails might give the power to issue the writ to any judicial tribunal in the State, according to its pleasure; and in some of the States this power is vested in other judicial tribunals than the highest court of original jurisdiction.

It is not, of course, to be doubted that legislation is necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the courts of the United States over mandamus as a case. Absence of such legislation does not abridge the right of the court in any way, for without the legislation it possesses no right to issue the writ at all.

How the distinguished Senator from Texas finds in the fact that the inferior courts can not exercise jurisdiction over the writs of habeas corpus and mandamus without legislative authority support for the proposition contained in this proviso to his amendment for the life of me I can not see. Reduced to a syllogism, it resolves itself into this:

Congress may confer jurisdiction upon the inferior courts of the United States over suits of mandamus and habeas corpus.

Congress may withhold from the courts of the United States jurisdiction over mandamus and habeas corpus.

Therefore Congress may in a case over which it has conferred jurisdiction upon an inferior court of the United States control and direct the steps which shall be taken therein pending the final determination thereof.

It seems, Mr. President, a perfect non sequitur.

PROHIBITION OF SUITS RESTRAINING THE ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF TAXES.

The Senator also referred to section 3224, Revised Statutes, which is:

No suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court.

I am surprised again that the Senator from Texas should find here any support by way of precedent for his contention. The power to lay taxes, Mr. President, is a sovereign power.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. That power is granted in precisely the same part of the Constitution as is the power to regulate commerce.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Which is the power we are proposing to exercise in this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but, Mr. President, the power proposed to be exercised by Congress in this bill must be exercised subject to the Constitution. The Senator thinks one way as to whether this would be exercising it under the Constitution, and I think another; so that it is rather petitio principii to make that suggestion.

But what I was saying is that the power to tax is a sovereign power, and no one knows better than the Senator that whether the Government will allow itself to be sued in any case is for the Government to say. It may be unjust; it may, from the standpoint of fair play, be mean; but in the last analysis, Mr. President, Congress may provide that in no case shall the Government of the United States be liable to suit. There is nothing better settled than that.

The Congress permitting the Government to be sued may, of course, prescribe the precise conditions upon which the suit may be brought. It may dictate the form of the suit and may designate the court in which it may be maintained. The rule has often been recognized that public policy will not permit—and it would seem to be manifest—judicial intervention in respect of the assessment and collection of governmental revenue. Section 3226 provides that:

No suit shall be maintained in any court for the recovery of any internal tax alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, etc., until appeal shall have been duly made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and a decision of the Commissioner has been had therein: Provided, That if such decision is delayed more than six months from the date of such appeal, then the said suit may be brought, without first having a decision of the Commissioner, at any time within the period limited in the next section—

Which is two years.

It is said in Nicholl v. United States (7 Wall., 122):

The immunity of the United States from suit is one of the main elements to be considered in determining the merits of this controversy. Every government has an inherent right to protect itself against suits, and if, in the liberality of legislation, they are permitted, it is only on such terms and conditions as are prescribed by statute. The principle is fundamental, applies to every sovereign power, and but for the protection which it affords the government would be unable to perform the various duties for which it was created. It would be impossible for it to collect revenue for its support, without infinite embarrassments and delays, if it was subject to civil processes the same as a private person.

UNITED STATES V. UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Senator from Texas also cited the case of the United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company (98 U. S., 569), properly characterizing it as based upon an extraordinary statute, which was sustained by the court. I find nothing either in the statute or in the decision upon it which sustains the proviso of the Senator from Texas.

The act of Congress before the court will be found in the Seventeenth Statutes at Large, 508. Briefly stated, it directed the Attorney-General to bring a suit in equity in some circuit court of the United States against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and a great many people living in different parts of the United States, upon various causes of action, authorized subpœnas to be served wherever those persons lived, and made such service as effective for the purposes of jurisdiction over the parties in the case as if they had been served in the district in which they severally resided, and authorized all the causes of action to be combined in one suit, although it is admitted—and I admit it—that without the act of Congress the bill would have been demurrable for being multifarious. The right of Congress to provide by special act for the issue of process running throughout the United States and bringing parties into a lawsuit pending in a district in which they do not reside, in exception to the general rule, was attacked in the Supreme Court. The court sustained the act.

Mr. President, it is perfectly within the power of Congress to make the subpœnas of the courts of the United States run throughout the jurisdiction of the United States, if Congress sees fit to do it. This was the first case I remember, but not the last, in which that was done. The Sherman antitrust law contains a provision of that kind. I offered the amendment to it, when I was first a member of the Senate, under which a subpœna could be served effectively in a suit under the Sherman antitrust law on anyone within the jurisdiction of the United States to bring the party into court, and it was adopted.

Mr. Justice Miller, delivering the opinion, says:

> Whether parties to a suit shall be compelled to answer in any court of the United States wherever they may be served with process, or shall only be bound to appear when found within the district where the suit is brought, is mere matter of legislative discretion, a discretion which ought to be governed by considerations of convenience, expense, etc., but which, when exercised by Congress, is controlling in the courts.

The Senator, I think, did not read the whole opinion, because it is perfectly clear from the opinion that this decision is not in support of his contention for this reason: The court held that, without the act of Congress, if cases involving the matters complained of had been separately brought in the same court had been pending, all being of equitable cognizance, they could have been consolidated under existing rules into one suit, and the court said, so far as this is concerned, speaking of the rule in regard to multifariousness:

> The rule itself, however, is a very accommodating one, and by no means inflexible. Such as it is, however, it is under the control of the legislative will, and may be modified, limited, and controlled by the same power which creates the court and confers its jurisdiction. It is simply a matter of practice.

The italicized words are not found in the official report, but are in the opinion certified in the Lawyers' Cooperative Edition by the clerk of the Supreme Court. I sent and had it compared with the original opinion, and it is in the original opinion.

It is simply a matter of practice. The Constitution imposes no restraint in this respect upon the legislative power of Congress. Section 921 of the Revised Statutes, which has been the law for fifty years, declares that when causes of like nature or relating to the same question are pending the court may consolidate them or make such other orders as are necessary to avoid costs and delay. It is everyday practice, under this rule, to do what the statute authorizes to be done in the case before us.

But it is argued that the statute is special, confers a special jurisdiction to try a single case, and is intended to confer new and substantial rights on the complainant at the expense and by a corresponding invasion of the rights of the defendants.

It does not create a new or special tribunal to try the case. All the circuit courts of the United States were, by the act, invested with the jurisdiction whenever called into action by filing the bill. Nor was any new power conferred on these courts beyond those which we have considered as affecting the mode of procedure.

STEPHENS V. CHEROKEE NATION.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Texas cited what seemed to be—and I thought it had considerable instant effect—a Congressional precedent, which he insisted sustains so far as Congressional precedent can sustain it, his proviso. It is found in an act of Congress considered by the Supreme Court in the case of Stephens v. Cherokee Nation (174 U. S., 445). The statement of facts is complicated, and it is not necessary to go into the subject at any length. There were 162 appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States in citizenship and allotment cases which arose under the administration of the Dawes Commission. Appeals were allowed by Congress from the United States courts in the Indian Territory direct to the Supreme Court in all citizenship cases and in all cases between either of the Five Civilized Tribes and the United States involving the constitutionality or validity of any legislation affecting citizenship or the allotment of lands in the Indian Territory, under the rules and regulations governing appeals to said court in other cases, with a proviso that—

> Appeals in cases decided prior to this act must be perfected in one hundred and twenty days from its passage; and in cases decided subsequent thereto, within sixty days from final judgment; but in no such case shall the work of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes be enjoined or suspended by any proceeding in, or order of, any court, or of any judge, until after final judgment in the Supreme Court of the United States.

The proviso was claimed to be retrospective as to a large class of the appeals, and therefore void. The court held that the appeal granted "was intended to extend only to the constitutionality or validity of the legislation affecting citizenship or the allotment of lands in the Indian Territory," both as applied to citizenship cases and to cases between either of the Five Civilized Tribes and the United States. No question was made as to the provision about injunction, because it was not involved. The court say:

> The contention is that the act of July 1, 1898, in extending the remedy by appeal to this court was invalid because retrospective, an invasion of the judicial domain, and destructive of vested rights. By its terms the act was to operate retrospectively, and as to that it may be observed that while the general rule is that statutes should be so construed as to give them only prospective operation, yet where the language employed expresses a contrary intention in unequivocal terms, the mere fact that the legislation is retroactive does not necessarily render it void.
> And while it is undoubtedly true that legislatures can not set aside the judgments of courts, compel them to grant new trials, order the discharge of offenders, or DIRECT WHAT STEPS SHALL BE TAKEN IN THE PROGRESS OF A JUDICIAL INQUIRY, the grant of a new remedy by way of review has been often sustained under particular circumstances. (Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall., 386; Sampeyreac v. United States, 7 Pet., 222; Freeborn v. Smith, 2 Wall., 160; Garrison v. New York, 21 Wall., 196; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S., 405; Essex Public Road Board v. Skinkle, 140 U. S., 334.)
> The United States court in the Indian Territory is a legislative court and was authorized to exercise jurisdiction in these citizenship cases as a part of the machinery devised by Congress in the discharge of its duties in respect of these Indian tribes, and assuming that Congress possesses plenary power of legislation in regard to them, subject only to the Constitution of the United States, it follows that the validity of remedial legislation of this sort can not be questioned unless in violation of some prohibition of that instrument.
> In its enactment Congress has not attempted to interfere in any way with the judicial department of the Government, nor can the act be properly regarded as destroying any vested right, since the right asserted to be vested is only the exemption of these judgments from review, and the mere expectation of a share in the public lands and moneys of these tribes, if hereafter distributed, if the applicants are admitted to citizenship, can not be held to amount to such an absolute right of property that the original cause of action, which is citizenship or not, is placed by the judgment of a lower court beyond the power of reexamination by a higher court, though subsequently authorized by general law to exercise jurisdiction.

I do not find anything in the case which supports the Senator's proposition. On the contrary, there is pertinent language in the opinion adverse to it. The only court which was clothed with jurisdiction of the matters involved was the United States district court (misnamed, the supreme court, say, so far as the word "district" is concerned) of the Indian Territory. The Dawes Commission was an administrative body, vested with quasi judicial functions, administering on behalf of the Government and under authority of Congress trusts which the Government had assumed in its relations to the Indians. I do not know the occasion for the prohibition of injunction until the cases should be decided by the Supreme Court, but I do not think the Commission could have been sued at all without the consent of Congress, nor do I doubt the power of Congress to say that in a suit against the Government, which a suit against the Commission practically would be, they should not be sued, or injunction issued to stop their administrative duties anywhere, until the constitutionality of the law had been decided by the Supreme Court.

The power of Congress over the Indians was plenary; the power of Congress over the Dawes Commission was plenary; the power of Congress over the purely legislative court in which the jurisdiction was vested was plenary, with the single limitation that in disposing of a case pending before it it would not be subject to legislative dictation. The power of Congress over the Territory was plenary.

Mr. President, a few words and I have done with this subject. It is my conviction that on the general principle the incorporation of the amendment prohibiting the court from suspending the rate in a suit brought to prevent its enforcement pending a final decree is not constitutional. If I am wrong on the general principle upon which I have been discussing this matter, and my conviction is that I am right, I am not able to entertain any doubt whatever that in a suit brought by a carrier to restrain the enforcement of a rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the operation of this bill an attempt to prevent the court from suspending the rate pending final decree can not be upheld.

This bill is an exercise by Congress of the constitutional power to regulate commerce among the several States. That power, it has been often held, is not without limitation. It is said in Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States (148 U. S., 334):

> But like the other powers granted to Congress by the Constitution, the power to regulate commerce is subject to all the limitations imposed by such instrument, and among them is that of the fifth amendment we have heretofore quoted. Congress has supreme control over the regulation of commerce, but if, in exercising that supreme control, it deems it necessary to take private property, then it must proceed subject to the limitations imposed by this fifth amendment, and can take only on payment of just compensation.

It is conceded, for it has been too often determined to be susceptible of doubt, that the fixing of rates either by the States or by the United States, directly by law or by an administrative board through a power delegated by the legislature, can not constitutionally be made conclusive. The court said in Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway v. Tompkins (176 U. S., 172):

When we recall that, as estimated, over ten thousand millions of dollars are invested in railroad property, the proposition that such a vast amount of property is beyond the protecting clauses of the Constitution, that the owners may be deprived of it by the arbitrary enactment of any legislature, State or national, without any right of appeal to the courts, is one which can not for a moment be tolerated.

It was said in Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Rwy. Co. v. Minnesota (134 U. S., 458):

The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company, involving as it does the element of reasonableness, both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation, requiring due process of law for its determination.

It is settled that the property of a railway company is private property, like unto other private property, save that it is affected with a public use, giving the public the right to regulate its use to prevent extortion and unjust discrimination. Subject to this limitation it can not be taken for public use without just compensation, and it is essential to valid legislation that when the just compensation shall have been judicially ascertained the owner of the property shall be able to obtain it. The compulsory use of such property is a "taking" within the Constitution, for its main value is in its use, and the right of the owner to receive just compensation for its use.

Mr. President, this proviso, or any having the same effect, if incorporated in the law would in effect make the rate conclusive until final decree. The "taking" is a continuous one. Every freight contract is a new taking, and if the rate fixed by the Commission, and to restrain the enforcement of which the suit is brought, is imposed upon the carrier until final hearing, and the decision of the court is against its validity, it inevitably occurs that during the pendency of the suit the use of the property of the carrier, through its own servants and at its own risk will have been taken under the law at a rate which the court will have held is not just compensation.

Can Congress do that thing constitutionally? If Congress can do that, why may it not provide that the order fixing the rate shall not be suspended until the Supreme Court shall have passed upon it? I can not believe that Congress can provide for the taking, through its own Commission, with a judicial review which is necessary to the validity of the act, and at the same time prohibit the court from exercising the inherent and long-established remedy in equity of suspending the order pending the suit, if it be made to appear that otherwise justice will not be done, but irremediable loss will ensue. Such a remedy seems to me to be a part of the constitutional guaranty.

On reflection, I think in such case the carrier would have no cause of action against shippers for the excess between the rate paid and the just compensation when ascertained. Under the operation of such a proviso the order would be in effect and the penalties of the law would apply, but the railway carrier could, I think, only receive and carry freight according to its published tariff, and if it attempted to do otherwise it could be enjoined or compelled by mandamus to observe it.

It is not a question, as the Senator seems to think it is, as to whether the people shall lose this money or the carrier shall lose it. We are not confronting that alternative, because it is in the power of the court and in the power of the Congress to prescribe the terms upon which such relief shall be afforded. The carrier may be required to pay into court every penny of the money collected above the rate fixed by the Commission or to give a bond, approved by the court, to pay it if in the end the determination of the court is adverse to him. The Supreme Court will know that.

There is no necessity, Mr. President, for any such provision in order to protect the people. There is necessity, in my opinion, in order to protect this bill, if it become a law, that no such provision shall be incorporated in it. If private property can be taken without just compensation for three months, it can be taken for three years. It can not be lawfully taken from an individual, and it can not be lawfully taken from a carrier. But what would be the result of the adoption of such a proviso? I fear, as I said before, that the court would decline to take jurisdiction at all. I think the court would be inclined to say that it is an impaired judicial power, which they could not exercise. In that event, Mr. President, what would become of the rate-fixing clause of this bill? It would be left without provision for judicial review, as the question could not be raised in the mandamus proceeding by the terms of the measure. It would be the Minnesota Milk case over again, of want of due process. (134 U. S.)

Mr. President, begging pardon for the time I have taken, I ask the Senate if it be not true that there is trouble enough in this subject that can not be eliminated from it? There are questions enough of the gravest possible import under the Constitution which are inseparable from it, and which can only be determined by the court when this bill becomes a law and the questions are presented. Is it wise, Mr. President, to inject into this measure one more challenge of its validity, especially when, with perfect justice, that may be omitted?

Mr. President, I am not an opponent of this measure. I want to see it speedily passed, as perfect as it may be, and with every constitutional danger avoided, so far as it can be done. I regard this as a loyal support of the measure and a real conservation of the public interest.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] occupied less time than I thought would be the case, and that is the reason why I am not prepared to proceed with the debate this afternoon. I will take occasion to address the Senate next Monday, unless there is some important business before it at that time, on the general question covered by the remarks submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, unless some Senator is prepared to speak on the unfinished business, I ask that it be temporarily laid aside and that we proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator if he has any objection to taking up the pension bills?

Mr. GALLINGER. They will be reached in a very short time. There are few bills preceding them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see present the Senator from South Carolina, who has in charge the regular order, but I should be glad if that bill could be continued for the remainder of the day. For one I hope we shall get away from the Capitol before the 1st of August, and I think it important that the consideration of the rate bill should be continued. It has not been considered very continuously this week.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that the request was made upon the assumption that no Senator was prepared to continue the discussion.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not even know that the Senator from New Hampshire had made a request.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had made a request that we go to the Calendar under Rule VIII, if no Senator is prepared to continue the discussion of the unfinished business. I have no disposition to interrupt that, of course. I agree with the Senator from Iowa that we ought to continue its consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that the consideration of this bill will be continued. There certainly must be opportunities desired by Senators to speak upon some phase of the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I gave notice day before yesterday that after this week I would be compelled to keep the bill before the Senate and either have talk or votes. Under the rules we can make Senators talk or we can vote. I have been unwilling to dragoon those who have been unwilling to agree to a vote, and I am still unwilling, but after the two set speeches which are now booked for Monday—the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has notified me he wants to speak and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] was to speak to-day—I intend, as I said, to press matters with all the vigor that the rules permit. I think we will probably get along better if we do not begin to put on the screws until Tuesday.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Iowa. We ought to go ahead with the consideration of this bill. This thing of postponing and postponing the vote seems unnecessary. I understand there are some Senators who want to make regular speeches. But we have all these amendments which are pending here—there must be fifty or sixty of them—and we have made no agreement in regard to them. Why not take up some of these amendments and commence considering and voting on them? We can vote on them at one time as well as at another. If we can not vote upon them, we can at least consider them. I have presented two or three amendments. Other Senators have amendments. Why can not some Senator present his amendment now and let us go on with the discussion of it?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to have that course followed. I have felt, however, that under the custom maintained here it would be more agreeable and certainly fairer to all Senators to notify them when we are going to begin really to do some work here.

Mr. FORAKER. It would be better to notify them when we are going to vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. I mean to vote; to vote on amendments, for instance. There are probably twenty Senators out of the city on one mission or another; we all have to go off occasionally; and I do not think it would be fair to those Senators to say now we are going to take up an amendment and vote on it to-day. I had hoped and expected——

Mr. FORAKER. I do not suggest a vote, but I do suggest that we might go on with the consideration and discussion of some of these amendments.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield further to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to repeat what I said on a previous occasion, that in my judgment it would be more satisfactory, and that we would reach a wiser disposition of amendments, if, whenever we have discussed a given amendment, we vote on that amendment then and there. But we ought not to begin to dispose of amendments without notice; that is all.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with what the Senator from South Carolina says in that respect. But there are amendments here of importance, and some of not very great importance. Still the amendments are numerous. We have had a hiatus here in the general debate nearly every day this week. I am not complaining of it. It was impossible for it to be otherwise. But we can not go on forever in this way. I was not present in the Senate Chamber during all of to-day's session, as Senators know, because I have work in committee——

Mr. TILLMAN. Everybody realizes how much work the Senator from Iowa has on his hands.

Mr. ALLISON. But I had hoped we could take up these amendments and debate them. I am very glad that the Senator from South Carolina has given notice that on Monday next he will ask the Senate to proceed with this bill without interruption; and I hope he will persist in that course.

Mr. TILLMAN. I give the Senator assurance that I will hold it before the Senate and compel a vote, or compel somebody to talk, if the Senator and others like him will back me in it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will cheerfully join the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. Why can we not agree now that the general debate shall close, say, one week from to-day?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we can; or even in less than a week.

Mr. BAILEY. Well; and then proceed to consider this bill under some rule that allows ten or fifteen minutes' debate on the amendments, and at the close of the discussion on each amendment, as suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, vote on that amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. And dispose of it.

Mr. BAILEY. Lay it aside as finished, whether we adopt it or reject it. In that way the Senate would be brought to vote on each amendment immediately after it had been discussed.

I venture to say that Senators would hear the discussion on each amendment when they understood that at the close of that discussion they were going to be called upon to vote for or against the amendment. On the contrary, if the amendments are all under discussion and none of them is to be voted upon until the end, Senators, being thoroughly satisfied as to one amendment and not knowing whether that is the amendment under discussion or not, will not pay the close attention that they will if each amendment is to be disposed of at the end of the discussion on it.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to everything the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] says as respects the amendments, but we shall never begin to vote on the amendments unless we have some understanding respecting them.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. So far as I am concerned personally, I would be glad to second the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, that we have an early time for beginning the ten-minute debate which he suggests, and an arrangement for a final vote on the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Say Thursday next.

Mr. ALLISON. I would suggest Thursday next.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to offer an amendment. It is an amendment with respect to review by the court. I offer it now so that it may be printed and we may have it before us, and I shall want to submit some remarks on it, perhaps, at the proper time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his request?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do for the present.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to say in offering this amendment that it is one entitled to more than usual consideration. We are not the only legislative body dealing with this subject.

Mr. CULLOM. Can we not have it read?

Mr. FORAKER. I will ask to have it read in a moment.

The legislature of Ohio has been enacting railway rate legislation. After very long and very careful consideration of the subject they enacted a bill from which I take this provision, making no change whatever except only in the name of the court to which the appeal shall be made. This is the result of their deliberations. They are men who, after they had been giving considerable consideration to this subject, felt that they were not only sufficiently familiar with the general subject of rate making, but also with all the constitutional and legal difficulties involved to warrant them in advising their representatives in the Senate of the United States how they should vote on this bill.

Now, it is because of the fact that this is the result of their deliberations, now enacted into law and now in force in Ohio, that I ask to have the amendment read from the desk, for the information of Senators, as an amendment to this bill providing for a court review.

Mr. BACON. Do we understand that it meets with the approval of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; entirely.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it will gratify all of us to know that cordial relations have been established between the Senator from Ohio and the legislature of his State.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, there has been at no time any lack of cordiality in our relations. They have at times been more than cordial—in fact, even warm.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope Senators will see what the legislature of Ohio thinks is a proper court review.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. Any railroad or other party in interest being dissatisfied with any order of the Commission fixing any rate or rates, fares, charges, classifications, joint rate or rates, or any order fixing any regulations, practices, or services may, within sixty days, commence an action in the circuit court of the United States in which the carrier has its principal operating office, against the Commission as defendant to vacate and set aside any such order on the ground that the rate or rates, fares, charges, classifications, joint rate or rates fixed in such order is unlawful or unreasonable, or that any such regulation, practice, or service fixed in such order is unreasonable, in which action the adverse parties shall be served with the summons. The Commission shall file its answer, and on leave of court any interested party may file an answer to said complaint within ten days after the service thereof, whereupon said action shall be at issue and stand ready for trial upon ten days' notice by either party. All actions brought under this section shall have precedence over any civil cause of a different nature pending in such court, and the said court shall always be deemed open for the trial thereof, and the same shall be tried and determined as other civil actions. Any party to such action may introduce original evidence in addition to the transcript of the evidence offered to said committee.

a. No injunction shall issue suspending or staying any order of the Commission except upon application to the said court or a judge thereof, notice to the Commission having been given and hearing having been had thereon.

b. If, upon the trial of such action, evidence shall be introduced by the plaintiff which is found by the court to be different from that offered upon the hearing before the Commission, or additional thereto, the court before proceeding to render judgment, unless the parties to such action stipulate in writing to the contrary, shall transmit a copy of such evidence to the Commission and shall stay further proceedings in said action for fifteen days from the date of such transmission. Upon the receipt of such evidence the Commission shall consider the same, and may alter, modify, amend, or rescind its order relating to such rate or rates, fares, charges, classification, joint rate or rates, regulation, practice, or service complained of in said action, and shall report its action thereon to said court within ten days from the receipt of such evidence.

c. If the Commission shall rescind its order complained of, the action shall be dismissed; if it shall alter, modify, or amend the same, such altered, modified, or amended order shall take the place of the original order complained of, and judgment shall be rendered thereon as though made by the Commission in the first instance. If the original order shall not be rescinded or changed by the Commission, judgment shall be rendered upon such original order.

d. Either party to said action, within sixty days after service of a copy of the order or judgment of the court, may appeal or take the case up on error as in other civil actions. Where an appeal is taken the cause shall, on the return of the papers to the higher court, be immediately placed on the calendar of the then pending term, and shall be assigned and brought to a hearing in the same manner as other causes on the calendar.

e. In all actions under this section the burden of proof shall be upon the plaintiff to show by clear and satisfactory evidence that the order of the Commission complained of is unlawful or unreasonable, as the case may be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. FORAKER. When we come to the consideration of amendments I will have something to say in behalf of that amendment, which I think is a broad, fair, square, well-considered proposition, with which I will be satisfied, and with which I think every fair-minded man should be entirely satisfied.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand that some Senators desire to submit amendments to the Indian appropriation bill and probably to discuss them, and so that they may be advised, I now give notice that to-morrow morning at the close of the routine morning business I will call up the bill for consideration.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why does not the Senator call up the bill now?

Mr. CLAPP. Because the other course will, I think, better meet the convenience of Senators.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION AND MILITARY RECORD BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand from the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], that he will withdraw his request that we proceed with the Calendar under Rule VIII. That being the case, I ask unanimous consent at this time that we proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. SCOTT. And military bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will include bills to correct military records.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota ask that the unfinished business be laid aside?

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood it had been laid aside. If not——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been laid aside.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills and bills to correct military records on the Calendar. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none. The first bill in order under the unanimous-consent agreement will be announced.

CLINTON B. WINTERSTEEN.

The bill (S. 5640) granting an increase of pension to Clinton B. Wintersteen was announced as the first bill in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Clinton B. Wintersteen, late of Company C, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: I wish to recur to the bill (S. 5641) granting an increase of pension to John W. Fletcher. This is a soldier of whom I have personal knowledge. In addition to his other disabilities, he met with a terrible accident, necessitating the amputation of his right arm and the loss of the use of his left arm. So he requires the constant aid and attendance of another person. I move that the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed be reconsidered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now move an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, before the word "dollars," strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill of which the Clerk has just reported the title.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is one of those San Francisco relief bills.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is a bill to provide for the necessary expenditures in the postal service arising from the earthquake and fire disaster in the State of California.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is intended to furnish employment for laboring men there?

Mr. LITTAUER. One part of the bill, that in connection with the Navy Department, is to furnish employment at the Mare Island Navy-Yard. The other part would take care of the necessary temporary quarters and clerical force in the Post-Office Department occasioned by the earthquake.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand the proposed legislation, it merely does now certain work which would have to be done later on.

Mr. LITTAUER. That is true as far as it applies to the Navy Department. It takes care of the postal service by meeting requirements for its immediate necessities.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I understand that a part of this bill is for the purpose of giving employment to labor in San Francisco?

Mr. LITTAUER. A part of this bill is to enable the Navy Department at Mare Island to proceed immediately with repairs to the ships now there. Authorization for these repairs has already been made, but the funds are not sufficient to carry on the work at this time. In the regular course this work would proceed after the 1st of July next, but this provision would enable the work to go right on at once. The bill will make the funds appropriated available only until the 1st of July.

Mr. MANN. I do not quite understand the purpose of the bill at this time, but I see by the morning paper that labor is in great demand at San Francisco, and it would seem that any bill especially designed for the purpose of putting men at work there would be against the interests of the people there instead of in their interest. There is money there and there is work there.

Mr. LITTAUER. We have taken that matter under full consideration and limited the expenditure until the 1st of July. It will apply to skilled mechanics and laborers in connection with the repairs under the Bureau of Steam Engineering.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums for the objects herein specified, namely:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to employ such additional laborers and mechanics as may in his judgment be necessary for immediate service under the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the navy-yard at Mare Island, Cal., to remain available until June 30, 1906, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

POSTAL SERVICE.

To enable the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, to meet emergencies in the postal service in the State of California, occasioned by earthquake and fire, to be paid out of the revenues of the postal service and to remain available until June 30, 1906, the sum of $70,000. A detailed statement of the expenditures of the sum shall be submitted to Congress at its next regular session.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I am a little dilatory, but I would like to state to the House the reason why we submit an appropriation of $100,000 while the message of the President recommends an appropriation of $300,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman making a statement? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTAUER. The $300,000 was intended to give employment to 2,100 men over a period of twelve months. We were advised by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy that $50,000 of this amount could properly be expended each month, consequently as the bill reported to the House extended only to the 30th of June, the balance of the current year, $100,000 was sufficient to meet the requirements. It was made applicable only to the Bureau of Steam Engineering, as all the other bureaus have funds sufficient for their work. On July 1 the annual appropriation for the Bureau of Steam Engineering will become available and the continuance of this work can be taken care of thereby.

The Postmaster-General wrote requesting $100,000, based on an estimate to cover twelve months. As the very largest part of this appropriation would be needed for temporary quarters, for equipment, wagon service, and the like, on figures presented to us by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General we have submitted $70,000 instead of $100,000, believing that full and ample provision was thus made for the emergency.

On motion of Mr. LITTAUER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF THE PRACTICE OF PHARMACY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8997) to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia for the purpose of being printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 8997) entitled "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. The report and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS TO INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11946) to amend section 6 of an act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians of the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar, in order to-day under the rule, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I feel constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, in order to-day under the rule.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, with Mr. CAPRON in the chair.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "thirty" and inserting "forty," and I desire to give my reasons for it.

This is a bill to increase from $20 a month to $50 a month the pension that was allowed to the widow of Capt. A. F. Scott, captain of the Thirteenth Infantry, who was wounded in the battle of San Juan, and from which wound he died. The Committee on Pensions has reported a bill increasing it to $30. Captain Scott left, without sufficient means to support them, a widowed mother 75 years old, now almost bedridden, who requires the constant services of an attendant; he also left a widow and two minor children, one of whom is also afflicted, and has to have constant care and attention. The widow is a daughter of a distinguished Federal general who died in the civil war upon the battlefield of the Wilderness—General Howell. Captain Scott was wounded by a Spanish bullet, which entered his neck and spine, and for eight years he dragged himself around, undertaking to perform what duties he could, and refused to apply for a pension. He was assigned to duty at the Georgia Military College, at Milledgeville, Ga., and after eight years of lingering and of suffering and of torture from the wound received in the defense of his country's flag, he died from that wound. About this there is no question, as I have the report of the committee to that effect, as well as the affidavits produced by most reputable physicians and the neighbors of the soldier. The captain left an estate that would probably yield to the widow and the two children and the mother an income of about $30 a month. This sum it is proposed to use to pay the expenses of the last illness and for the taking care of the wife, whose letter, if I undertook to read it to the House, containing the request that she makes for an increase sufficient to support the widowed mother of her husband, herself, and two minor children, would, I think, appeal to the House sufficiently that it would grant the pittance of an increase of $10 a month.

She has given, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, a father to her country—General Howell, who was killed at the battle of the Wilderness. She has given to her country her husband, who fell wounded, from which wounds he died, upon another battlefield for the advancement of civilization and the glory of her country's flag and her country's honor. She is left to-day almost without means—at least without sufficient means with which to care for the aged, decrepit mother of her husband or for herself and her two minor children.

There are those who have gained probably more honor, more distinction than this humble captain of the Regular Army from the battle of San Juan Hill. I have seen it stated in the press, and not denied, that the gentleman who now occupies the White House, and gained such distinction in that battle, was not there. Here is a man who was there, who fell mortally wounded upon that battlefield—wounds from which he lingered for eight years. It is true that he was retired as a major, but his widow is only to get the pay of the widow of a captain.

It is not often, Mr. Chairman, that I appeal to the House to change the report of a Committee on Pensions. The committee has gone as far as its rules permit. The Pension Bureau went as far as its rules permit. They pension his widow as the widow of a captain. He was a captain when he was shot down, leading his company in the fight. For eight years he lingered, as I stated, with this terrible wound. I have seen him myself, unable to rise except with the assistance of an attendant, and for eight years he dragged his weary life along until he was eased by his death. The report of the physicians shows that he died from decay of the spine, in which he was wounded. Now, I simply ask this House to increase this pension in recognition of the services of this gallant soldier. He was not a native of my State; neither is his wife. He was appointed to the Military Academy, as his military record will show, by General Grant. He served with distinction in the wars on the frontier against the Indians. His record is an honorable and a noble one, as the records of the War Department show. He landed among the first soldiers on the coast of Cuba, and he fell from a wound received from his country's enemies at the front of his company as he led them into battle. He has left his mother aged and decrepit, without means, except such as his wife may be able to furnish from this pension and the little pittance left his family by this soldier. He has gone, and his wife, broken down with eight years of nursing, appeals to the House to merely give an increase of $10, that she shall not be compelled to seek manual employment in order to support herself, the mother, and the children. I appeal to the generosity and the magnanimity of this House to give to her that pension to which she would have been entitled had her husband been a major at the time he was wounded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Just a minute, and I have done.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman for five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. He was on the retired list as a major. The widow of a major would be entitled to $40 a month. Because the wound prevented him being promoted, being disabled by the wound, he was never able to receive promotion for active service as a major; but he was a major on the retired list when he died. I simply ask the House to give to the widow and children enough money to support them, not in luxury, not in ease, but to buy the necessities of life for this widow of a soldier and this daughter of another soldier, who has given for the honor of her country both father and husband, that she may be prevented from having to work for a livelihood, which may be done by the Government extending the small pittance of $10 a month.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt a good record by this soldier and officer, but no more so than there is concerning the record of thousands of others who served under our flag. The gentleman is earnest in his sympathetic appeal, and it comes to all of us with great feeling when they themselves appear before us. But certainly neither this committee nor this House ought to be moved by sympathetic feeling to make an exception of this case as against thousands of others. This is a widow of a gallant officer, who, if she had been pensioned at the rate that the general law would give her under her husband's highest rank, would receive $25 a month. As she was pensioned as the widow of a captain, she receives $20 a month.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is it not a fact that the reason Captain Scott was not promoted to major was on account of incapacity from the wounds to do active service? And is it not a fact that he was on the retired list as a major?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That does not in any way affect the facts that I am stating; and I am giving the gentleman the benefit of all these things. Yet had she been pensioned as the widow of a major, she would only have received, under the general law, $25 a month. She now receives $20. The committee have reported a bill recommending 66 per cent increase over that amount. There are many widows of soldiers and sailors of this Union who fought as gallantly behind the guns as did the officers, but who are compelled to-day to subsist on $12 a month. We are now giving the highest amount given by the committee, given by this House, and given by Congress in cases of this kind and character, and I submit to the committee that the action on these other meritorious cases ought not to be overridden at this time. I therefore hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. Chairman, there are one or two other things which might be suggested. This widow is not entirely dependent upon her pension. She has property and has an income from it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman state how much that is?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That is another reason why this amendment should not prevail in the committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent to make a short reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may reply. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say that I do not know this lady; I never saw her. Her husband I have seen, and knew after he was wounded, when he came to our State and undertook to discharge duty, in pain and suffering, like a noble soldier that he was, as military instructor in the Georgia Military Academy. He was nothing to me or to my people, except that he lived with them. But they witnessed his suffering. They witnessed the devotion of his wife for the eight long years, and their hearts opened and their sympathies extended to the widow, her mother, and the children, and they have appealed to me to aid her by increasing her pension. Of course it is nothing but noble neighborly sympathy that actuates them. Permit me to read from letters that I have received from this lady. Surely if what I have said does not appeal to you, what she says should and may:

I shall truly be under a lifelong obligation to you.

That is, for having introduced the bill.

Eight years of sorrow, anxiety, and constant nursing will undermine anyone's health. A fairly good increase would ease the load, whereas if I don't get it it means hard work, which will soon break me down.

In another letter she wrote:

My means are so limited that unless I get an increase of pension I must go to work to support my little daughters, and my health is so broken with care and anxiety that hard work would soon end my life, and I should leave my little girls with no one to care for them.

Now, when did the committee have a rule? I know of an officer who was killed in the Philippines, Colonel Stotsenburg, as I understand, and he was pensioned at $50 a month, which was beyond the amount that the Pension Bureau would allow for his rank.

This is an exceptional case. I appeal to the House in the name of humanity, in the name of justice to this soldier and his wife and little ones and his mother, not to permit this wife to have to go out in the world and earn her living and undermine her health, which is already broken by a strain of eight years' close attention to and nursing of her husband. The gentleman from New Jersey says she has an income. Let us see. There is herself and the mother of the soldier, who is 75 years old. Here are the affidavits of reputable physicians and neighbors, who state that the mother is almost bedridden, and that she requires the constant attention of a nurse. One of the children is seriously afflicted and requires the constant attention of a nurse, and she has an income of not exceeding $30 a month. Think of it, $30 a month income! I propose to give her $40 a month; $480 a year and her income of $360 a year make together something over $800 a year, the magnificent sum upon which the gentleman from New Jersey expects this woman to support herself, the widowed mother of her husband, her two children, and pay physicians' bills, nursing, and maintenance. This lady, I repeat, has offered on the altar of her country both her father and her husband and is entitled to this small increase of the amount of pension allowed by the committee. I appeal to you to grant it to her.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "thirty" and insert "forty."

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, on a division (demanded by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER) there were—ayes 41, noes 53.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

PROGRESS OF THE BEET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAWSON in the chair) laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a report on the progress of the beet-sugar industry in the United States in 1905. Your attention is respectfully invited to the accompanying letter of the Secretary of Agriculture, recommending that 10,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture in addition to such number as may be desired for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 27, 1906.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18537—the agricultural appropriation bill—and pending that motion, I move that general debate on the bill be closed at half past 3 to-morrow (Saturday) afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] moves that general debate on the agricultural appropriation bill be closed at half past 3 to-morrow afternoon.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, on motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 18537—the agricultural appropriation bill—with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, in the forefront of my remarks to-day, I want to congratulate this side of the Chamber upon the fact that we have finally "flushed the covey." [Applause.] All the birds of the flock are rising rapidly as a result of our shots. They are no longer resting in the insolence of fancied security. The covey is acting as a covey of partridges generally does, each pursuing general partridge habits, but each with individual characteristics. He who is always the boldest on the other side, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], came forward the other day and made a speech in favor of the most unequal, iniquitous, and infamous of all species of class legislation—the ship-subsidy bill. If I have time after I am through with other things, I will attempt to analyze the reasoning, or alleged reasoning which he utters in support of that measure. I shall attempt at some time, if not to-day, to find out wherein the lawyers, doctors, dentists, preachers, carpenters, bricklayers, sewing women, and all the balance of the varied occupations that make up American citizenship, are benefited by money collected by taxation and then taken out of the Treasury in order to enrich men in the shipbuilding trade, who are already very rich, and already the most highly protected class in the American Union, because they have an absolute monopoly of shipbuilding for the coastwise, lake, and river trade—a monopoly given them by statute.

The gentleman from Ohio followed the usual partridge flight circle—the orthodox way—and then there came the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], and he ran along the ground in his elegant way. Some partridges, you know, will run along the ground, in order to attract attention from that which they desire to conceal, perhaps their infants, or maybe their "infant industries."

I do not listen to any man upon either side of this House with as much pleasure as to the gentleman from Illinois. I love good English, and the waters of his "well of pure English, undefiled," flow down from his mouth like the honey that "ran down Aaron's beard."

He is the essayist of the Republican side. He speaks the English of Addison and Dick Steele, and if at last his English somewhat smacks of the midnight oil, what of that? We are all glad of it, because by the aid of the midnight oil he brings upon the floor of this House what is seldom brought here—a finished product. I for one love to hear him, and yesterday when he pronounced his delightful essay upon "The gentleman who went to New York," and upon "Keene, of Broadway, Keene, of Lower Broadway," and rang all the changes that a cultured man of elegant diction could ring upon that key, I kept feeling within myself, "if he is that strong in the index, what the dickens is to become of RAINEY when he gets to the argument?" Mr. Chairman, sometimes out of the style of Dick Steele and Joseph Addison he fell into the strong and suggestive satire of Swift, and I began to think my friend his colleague was going to look particularly small before he got through; but really after shining in the preamble I think that both sides will bear me out in stating that before he reached the point that the old playwriters used to call the "argument," he fell far below the high standard of his index. [Applause.] The gentleman opened by saying the remarks of his colleague [Mr. RAINEY] had met with some "passing comment," and then he proposed to make a few "passing" remarks. It took him two hours to "pass" his colleague from Illinois. [Applause.] He said that his colleague had put a mass of stuff into "the somnolent pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD." I noticed this; the RECORD may be somnolent, like dead things usually are, but that side of the Chamber was not somnolent while his colleague from Illinois was speaking. [Loud applause.] He rang the changes upon the fact that the gentleman had gone to New York. "He went to New York." He rang the changes so finely and so feelingly and so naturally on that that I thought perhaps my friend [Mr. BOUTELL] himself had been to New York. [Laughter and applause.] He knew so well just what would happen to a green "sucker" from his State in the city of New York. [Applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, before he got through I think the whole House appreciated the fact that what was hurting him was not that his colleague had been to New York, but that his colleague had come back from New York and brought a story to tell the House and the country.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, my friend with his elegant diction went on to try to show that the people of his State were not "suckers" but "succors." Now, whether they are "suckers" or "succors" is a matter to be determined by the next election. If they are "suckers" they will still continue to be fooled and deceived by the blandishments of this Republican party that revises the tariff "by its friends" before it goes in and "stands pat" after it gets in. [Applause.] If they shall deserve the name of "succors," it will be because at the end of that election they shall bring succor by their votes to the American people who are fighting special interests that are robbing them in the interest of foreign consumers.

The gentleman displayed a watch which cost $55 away back yonder, and which could be bought for $22 now, and he seemed to think the reduction in price was owing to the protective tariff and the policies of his party. Nothing is plainer to him who studies the history of the country than the fact that the watch went down from $55 to $22 in spite of just such things as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], his colleague, had exposed upon the floor of this House. Watches have gone down in price in England, Switzerland, everywhere where watches are made. And the gentleman himself [Mr. BOUTELL] disclosed during his argument the fact that as far back as 1856 "the ingenuity of the Yankee," as the witness called it, had even then established a thriving and prosperous watch business in the United States, when the duty on watches was, as he admitted, only about 10 per cent ad valorem. He himself read the evidence of some one, I have forgotten of whom, to that effect. And yet I have introduced a bill into this House to reduce the duty on watches and cases, and thus far the, shall I say "somnolent," Committee on Ways and Means has not taken any notice of that bill, and although I am no prophet, I dare say they will not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when my friend had gotten through with the diction of his speech, which was not only pleasant and entertaining, but edifying, he came to the testimony, and there he made an appeal in which I join him. I believe that men ought upon the floor to be absolutely sincere with one another. As far as men in the heat of debate can be accurate and just, they ought to be accurate and just. I expected to hear something from him himself; and if any testimony had come from him I would have believed it almost as conclusively as if it had come from my own brother. I have the most absolute confidence, not only in his intellectual integrity, but in his integrity of every sort. But when he began to produce his witnesses, they were the defendants themselves, and every one of them, as far as I could learn, was an interested witness in the case. He said that his colleague from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] asserted that there was a trust. His colleague inferred that there was a trust from the fact of the manner of dealing in the watch trade and from the similarity of the contracts which were made with the retailers not to sell at less than certain prices. It is at least a natural inference. It is true that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] rather showed that these were contracts about a certain sort of watch only, and contended that it was a contract with the jobber. That may be true. But the fact remains that it was a contract binding the buyer from the watch companies to sell at not below a certain price in America, and the fact remains that those watches are sold in Europe at less than that price. And if there were testimony needed upon that subject, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL]—a Republican, and as I understand it, in the watch trade—a few days ago gave it to the House; frankly and honestly, fairly and squarely admitted the fact, and undertook to justify it.

Mr. Chairman, the question is: Was there any such contract as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] sent up to the desk and put in the RECORD? All talk about the contract avails nothing in the presence of the actual contract. It speaks for itself.

Then my friend from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] attempts to show by the testimony of W. J. Bryan, in the most curiously remote possible manner, that would never have suggested itself to any but a remarkably metaphysical intellect like his own, that these people are not in a trust. Now, it depends upon what you mean by a trust. That they have formed a technical trust I do not believe. That they are doing business together in a pool I do not believe; but that they have an agreement about prices I do believe, because the evidence, in my opinion, makes that fact conclusive, and that they have combined about a scale of prices in the American market below which they must not go appears to my mind to be conclusive. The contracts themselves show it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, after he was through it turned out that Mr. Bryan had merely written a letter to the Elgin or the Waltham Watch Company, I have forgotten which, to ask the question if they were in a trust, and that the party to whom the letter was addressed wrote back, very naturally, to say that they were not in a trust. Bryan was very childlike if he expected a different reply, if any at all was made. The gentleman seems to think that evidently Mr. Bryan had in his mind to make a few observations in the columns of the Commoner concerning that matter. I think upon reflection he will know what Mr. Bryan really had in his mind. I believe Mr. Bryan has stated to the whole world that he will not publish the advertisement of a trust in the columns of the Commoner, and I suppose his idea was to find out whether or not this was a trust so that he could cut out the advertisement in case it was, or be prepared to refuse an advertisement if offered. But suppose that was not. Suppose that was not his object; what sort of a metaphysical ingenuity must that be which would denominate as proof a letter of inquiry merely coupled with the demonstration of the fact that the writer of the letter never afterwards opened his mouth.

Mr. BOUTELL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELL. I will ask the gentleman, upon his assumption of Mr. Bryan's motive, if we find that advertisements of the Elgin Watch Company and the Waltham Watch Company are in the Commoner——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would arrive at the conclusion that Mr. Bryan had arrived at the conclusion that the Elgin Watch Company and the Waltham Watch Company were not in the trust. I would arrive at the further conclusion, from what I have lately heard, that if Mr. Bryan had heard the testimony that has been offered to this House, which was not then in existence, and had known of the exploits of one Keene—perhaps a doubtful character, I do not know, but undoubtedly "of Broadway—Lower Broadway"—he would not have arrived at that conclusion and could not very well have arrived at it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And then if Mr. Bryan could arrive at it that would not make it absolutely true. I do not agree with the gentleman's colleague [Mr. RAINEY] that a party should be leaderless. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] did not mean quite that. He was in the heat of debate and indulging in metaphors. I think that a leaderless party is a good deal like a jackass with his head cut off—it will not go very far, it will not accomplish very much; it can not go forward or even altogether backward or sideways. [Laughter.] But at the same time the Democratic party is not to that extent led by anybody that when one of the leaders arrives by inference at a conclusion, his having done so would make it compulsory upon the part of every other Democrat to adopt that conclusion.

Now, the gentleman had read some letters here to prove that the watch companies did not originate these contracts, that it was not on their account that these agreements about price were made, but that they were made in the interest of the retailer, or at the request of the retailer. Suppose that is true. You have merely shifted your ground from an agreement among the manufacturers to an agreement between the manufacturers and the retailers or jobbers, at the instigation of the latter, to hold up to a certain price in the American market. Certain language which I caught in those letters impressed that fact upon my mind. In one of them this language occurs which the gentleman from Illinois will recollect: That this agreement with the factory, if the factory would have it made with all to whom it sold, would "eliminate many unpleasant things." "Eliminate many unpleasant things." How significant! That is, a good deal of the unnecessary competition among the people who are buying watches to sell to others! Another letter he read said, "they wanted the assistance of the 'factory' to hold a fixed price." So they "wanted the assistance" of the factory to form an agreement, or combination, as regards the price, amongst themselves and thus force the agreed price in the American market. The factory "consented" and the contracts were sent out to the trade and were required to be signed when the factory sold the watches. So, whether the factory was the original mover of the combination or not, it was the final consenting, propelling, and compelling party to it.

Then I noticed this sentence in one letter: "The price which the factory wishes me to sell at." It seems that the factory "wished."

Then the gentleman brings the testimony of certain retailers that certain watches which were sent to them by the factory and which the factory said it had caused to be bought from Keene, could be bought for certain prices in the market, in several instances less than the price alleged to be that at which the same watch was sold by Keene. And he says that the manner in which these watches came into their possession was that these witnesses "went, unknown to Keene," and bought them. That certain watches were bought from Keene at the instance of the factory, there can be no doubt. That certain watches were sent by the factory to the retailers to be priced, there can be no doubt. The gentleman has proven all this. True, I have no doubt, they bought watches and sent watches, but the gentleman from Illinois is too good a lawyer not to notice the possible hiatus between the initiation and the conclusion of the transaction. Who knows whether the watches bought were the watches submitted to the retailers or not?

The gentleman then rang the changes and proved beyond all doubt that there had not been this degree of exportation "by the Elgin company." Nobody said that there had been. Never at one moment has the assertion been made that the Elgin Watch Company or the Waltham Watch Company was the exporter of the watches. Everybody knows that the Elgin and Waltham companies make only works, and that works have to go in cases, as a rule, before they are exported as "watches." The assertion was made that they were exported and that they were reimported and sold in New York, not that the factories exported them. The question here is not, Who is Keene? I do not care who Keene is. He may be the greatest get-rich-quick rascal that ever existed, and he may have the worst character that ever was. I am willing to admit that for the sake of argument, although I understand that he is a man of good character, notwithstanding he lives on "Broadway, lower Broadway," and notwithstanding the fact that he formed the acquaintance of my friend Mr. RAINEY, of Illinois, when Mr. RAINEY, of Illinois, "went to New York." [Laughter.]

The question is not, Who is Keene? The question is, What did Keene do? And the question back of that, and more important than that, is, What are these watch companies doing, and what have they been doing? And back of that, and more important yet, is the question: What is it that enables them to do what they are doing? My friend from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] is a good debater as well as a good essayist, and he is a good lawyer and a good reasoner, and for that reason, I suppose, he never went into two phases of this question. They lie there yet, embedded in the argument of his colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] like very rocks of resistance against all the assaults of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL]. All that he has said thus far has had the same effect upon those irrefragable facts as shooting peas at the face of Gibraltar would have in the way of removing obstructions across the Peninsula of Spain. Oh, Mr. Chairman, a fact is the one thing in this world that a brave and true man will fall down before and reverence and worship wherever he meets it. A fact comes from God. You can not burrow under it. You can not go through it. It is there. It is the one imperishable thing in this world whose influence extends to the next. Granite may wear away, things may burn up and go into the invisible air, and after a while the whole of creation may become a wreck and a ruin, but a fact recognized by a sound human mind as a fact, once seen, is always unforgetable, and no wise man ever tries to avoid or evade it. You may try to meet what is sought to be proven by the fact, but no wise man ever attempts to shirk the fact itself or to go around it, to deny its existence, or to avoid it. What are these two facts? The first fact is that there were a lot of these watches sent over to England, and a lot more of those watches were later contracted to be sent over to England, and the watches were not delivered, and when suit was brought to force delivery the plea of the defense was that a man had bought the watches to sell in France, and that they, the defendants, had found out he wanted them really to sell in the United States. Horrible duplicity!

If there were no combination to fix one price in America and another abroad—if this company did not have one price in America and another abroad—what business was it of the company in America what the man had done or would do with the watches? He had bought them from the company here. They were his. He had paid for them or had agreed to pay for them and had entered into an agreement that was satisfactory to the company. The company had sold them at its own price. There was no doubt or solid pretense of doubt about the payment and the compliance of the buyer with every condition of the sale, save only the condition, or understanding, to sell in France and not in America. The American sellers could not be hurt by one particle if he sold the watches at a loss or if he gave them away, nor whether he sold them in Timbuctoo or Baltimore. The company had no sort of legitimate business interest in the question as to whether he should dispose of the watches at Timbuctoo, at London, in Sydney, or in New York.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that I neglected to say the other day in my argument that this suit was settled. It did not go to a conclusion. The Keystone Company paid on behalf of the Elgin Company and themselves £500 rather than keep this contract.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; rather than keep this contract or continue their own suit, they paid £500—$2,500—and why? Oh, "gentle shepherd, tell me why." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Suppose I sell 300 bales of cotton to a man in Liverpool and he tells me he wants to make goods out of it in England and send the goods to Bombay. I then find out afterwards, lo and behold! that he wants to ship the cotton back to Charleston; that he finds it profitable to himself to do so. I would be regarded as a roving lunatic, if I made any objection, because I am nothing but a cotton planter. I am engaged in the obscure pursuit of raising things out of the soil. Again, I repeat, at your first opportunity, "gentle shepherd, tell me why." What is the rational answer to it? There can be but one. There was an interest somewhere involved in keeping up one price in the American market regardless of the profit to the purchaser in other markets. What was that interest? The watch factories? I do not know. The American jobbers? I do not know. An agreement amongst the American retailers and indorsed and approved by the watchmakers? I do not know. But I know that there can be no legitimate business reason in the ordinary course of affairs after a man sells his goods at his own price why he should follow them any further. He is not to be damaged in any way of which he can legitimately complain. Why, if I went to the Waltham Watch Company to-morrow and bought three hundred and eighty-odd watches at their American price and came back here and gave them away, one to each Member of this House, I dare say there would be no complaint. Yet, if I go to the Waltham Watch Company, I have got to tell them, in the first place, it appears, what I want my watches for, export or domestic sale; and then, if I tell them I want them for export and I export them and then get ready to bring the watches back to America, they will come into court and refuse to deliver the watches which they have contracted to sell, on the ground that I have deceived them about my purpose. Now, that is one of these irrefragible facts in the argument of Mr. RAINEY which has been avoided by his colleague, Mr. BOUTELL—both of Illinois. Let me state another irrefragible fact. And right there I want to stop long enough to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] that he denies arguendo that the watches that Keene sold were exported, and yet these watches could not have been reimported unless they had been first exported by somebody.

There lies the irrefragible fact that 1,200 of them, I believe it was, were refused admission upon being reimported, upon the ground that they had been changed in character by the addition of a Swiss dial, I believe it was. There were 1,200 of them at least that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] must admit had been exported and were sought to be reimported.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELL. Because we might as well have our minds come together on this, if I am incorrectly informed as to the facts, so that it takes this whole matter of this reimportation of these 1,300 or 2,300 watches out of this discussion altogether. Right here I must say that I did not even comprehend some of the questions that were asked yesterday relating to these 2,300 watches, because our minds were working along two different channels.

The advertisements which the gentleman, my colleague, inserted in the RECORD, in perfect good faith, of course, advertised a number of the high-grade watches of both the Waltham and the Elgin works—high-grade movements, selling from $30 upward. The testimony of these companies, as corroborated by their records, show, first, that there is little, if any, foreign market for those high-grade movements; second, the actual number sold for export by the Elgin company was 37, as against thousands stated in the advertisement. Now, these 2,300 watches, as I have been told, are 1,000 Elgin watches and 1,300 Waltham watches of the very cheapest movement—those that are called "gilt-plate" movements—costing from $2.50 to $3 a movement, sold abroad to the cheap jobbers of England and Switzerland to be fitted up with foreign cases and dials. Now, that is the point I thought was perfectly clear to all the members of the committee, but the questions, as I read over the remarks, showed they were not, and we were speaking of two different things.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is this point always: The gentleman seems to go back all the time to the number of watches "exported by the Elgin Company" or "sold by the Elgin Company for export." Nobody contends that the "Elgin Company exported them." Moreover, he seems to forget that in the present condition of industrial affairs in this country there is almost a habit—there are a great many instances, at any rate—of people deceiving the factory by pretending to buy for export when they are really buying for domestic sale, and their object in deceiving the factory is that the factory has a lower price for purchases for export than for purchases for domestic sale. It by no means follows, even if we admit the absolute veracity of every statement made by the Elgin company as regards the number of watches that they have exported or sold for export, that that number comes anywhere near agreeing with the number of watches that have been actually exported or sold in our market.

Why, I remember, if the gentleman will excuse me, in a speech upon this floor in the Fifty-seventh Congress, I believe it was, in the speech upon "Tariff Barons and Tariff Beggars," I quoted from an editorial in a great manufacturer's journal, I have forgotten which one—it is in the RECORD—an article in which the journal complained of the bad faith and trickery and swindling passed upon the manufacturers of the country by men who bought under the pretense they were buying for export when really they wanted to sell the goods in America, and especially one demonstrated instance, which will appear in that editorial then quoted by me, was concerning somebody who bought a lot of steel stuff under the pretense that it was to be sold in British Columbia, and then managed to have it landed en route at some point in the State of Washington; and this trade journal absolutely called up to the halter almost, called up to the judgment seat at any rate, and sentenced this purchaser as a vile swindler—this man who had told this lie in order to get these goods in order to commit the great crime of letting American citizens have the goods cheap rather than sell them cheap to British subjects across the line, as he had promised the factory to do. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, that that man did lie there is no doubt; that a gentleman would not have lied there is equally no doubt. I do not stand here to say that the man who did the thing did a right thing, but I cite it merely to prove a condition of things so chronic that absolutely manufacturers' journals complain about it as a constant swindle and menace to the trade. Now, then, I want to call the gentleman's attention to another fact. If Keene did not import these watches or reimport them, then the custom-house records will show it. The copies of the invoices which had to be shown to the custom-house officials are there somewhere. I am informed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] that he has made every effort to get the Government to give him certified copies of those papers, and that he has met with refusal or failure at the hands of this Republican Administration, presumably protecting these, the beneficiaries of its peculiar policy. Let the gentleman, if I may use the inelegant phrase, "rub his mind up against" these two propositions: Why is it that the watchmakers took the trouble to make themselves a party to prevent the reimportation of the watches turned back if they could not be hurt by it? How could they be hurt by it if they did not fear underselling? How could there be any apprehension of underselling if the price at which they had been sold for resale abroad was not one less than that at which like watches were sold here? Aye, not only less, but so much less as to enable the reimporter to be able to lose freight both ways and yet sell in our sheltered market at a profit sufficient to induce him to go into the business and to try to stay in it! If it be true that their price abroad be equal to the price at home, or even if it be true that it is only a little less or so near the price at home that the freight across the ocean and the freight back would make the goods cost as much money (or more) when brought back as they would have cost if bought originally for the home market and held here from the beginning, then what interest do these people have in making themselves a party to stopping the reimportation?

Then this second and more significant fact: Why did they refuse to deliver the watches in England when they found out what Keene was doing? And, when sued, why did they plead that the man who bought had said he was going to "sell them in France?" What makes it a crime or a breach of business faith to send those watches back to America? What makes it a violation of the vital interests of the Waltham Company and the Elgin Company? For what reason did the companies object? After all is said and done, what is it the Keene folks are caught in doing? They are caught in committing the stupendous fraud of bringing back to America, to sell to Americans, goods they had bought under a promise to sell to Frenchmen! That is the whole thing in a nutshell. There is no way to get around it. The watch companies had sold at their price. The case companies had sold at their price. What difference to them was it to whom as watch wearers the watches were to be sold?

The only rational solution of it all is this: First, that they have one price in Europe, as Mr. TIRRELL confessed, and another price here; and secondly, that they have an agreed price in this sheltered market—sheltered by the tariff on watches—to such an extent that an agreement can be successfully entered into and carried out, which they dare not allow to have the first breach made in. The moment that anybody begins to sell those watches upon the American market cheaper than the American listed price, that moment this agreement between somebody—and judging by the contracts here it is between the jobbers and the factories and the retailers all, all along the line—this combination as to prices between somebody goes to pieces, and that moment that thing which the Republican party promised years ago would take place as the result of protection—would actually take place not as a result of protection, but in spite of it. And what was that thing? They said: If you protect these infant industries, you will after a while have a sufficient number of home producers and home manufacturers to bring down the price by competition with one another to the foreign price. Now, then, to avoid that promised result—because in spite even of any obstacle legislatively erected that sort of thing might possibly in the course of time take place—this combination as to prices is entered into. Meanwhile the people would have paid an enormous price for the legislative hastening process. But to prevent that end which would come upon the consummation of the hastening process, these people enter into their agreement—I do not care whether you call it a trust or not—into their combination to charge a certain price, let us call it, in what market? In the American market. Why not in the foreign market? Because they are not sheltered there. They could not carry out the agreement there. Why in the American market? Why, to keep the very things which the Republicans promised would take place after the "establishment of industries" from taking place. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, in that connection I want to read an article from a paper that is dear to the heart of my friend from Connecticut who is now looking at me. It is from the old Hartford Courant, a good old paper, a little old-maidish in its ways, but mighty true and mighty truthful. I cut this out of the Washington Post. It is headed: "The Shabbiest Fraud." The language "the shabbiest fraud" is that of the Hartford Courant itself, as you will see in a moment. The Hartford Courant is a Republican paper of the better sort, of the common-sense sort, not of the "stand-pat" sort.

The Hartford Courant—

Says the Washington Post—

which was a venerable newspaper long before the Republican party was born and has been a strong and consistent advocate of Republican principles and policies ever since the birth of that party, finds it hard under present conditions to put up the defense of protection that the system deserves—

Says the Washington Post, and, you know, the Washington Post is, upon "the principle of protection," a Republican and not a Democratic paper—

When open and avowed enemies of this beneficent policy show up the trickery and hoggishness of certain protected interests and then denounce protection itself, our contemporary's trouble begins.

I would not use that language. It would be unparliamentary, coming from me.

When, for example, the free traders or "tariff-for-revenue-only" advocates show that some of our principal manufacturers habitually sell their products in foreign countries at prices far below those which their home patrons are compelled to pay.

Mark that word "compelled," my friends. Are they compelled by the manufacturers? No. By the trusts or manufacturers that make a combination? No. But by something back of that. By the big stick in the hands of these people. And what is the big stick? The tariff. No manufacturers in the world could by a combination compel me to pay more for a plow than that plow sells for in the Argentine, if other people all over the world who make plows could sell me a plow in the United States.

Are compelled to pay; they put a plausible argument into the mouths of antiprotectionists. And the plausibility of that argument is so difficult to expose that it is often accepted as sound logic.

Well, I reckon it is. The Washington Post continues:

Of course it is a fallacy, for there is not a more thoroughly and overwhelmingly vindicated policy in the arena of American politics than the protection of home industries.

"Protection of home industries!" How generous that sounds! How cunningly that sort of language is devised to make you forget that while protectionism protects some home industries, it taxes in order to do it all other industries and all consumers. The word "some" ought always to precede the phrase "home industries," if the sentence is to express truth and not pretense.

It stands so firmly that its enemies can not overthrow it, even with the aid of those false friends of protection who persist in abusing it for their own advantage.

Now, here we have what the Hartford Courant—dear old veteran, abolition, Republican paper—says:

The shabbiest fraud that is played on the United States by managers of protected industries is this trick of misusing the protection that we provide—of making it benefit foreigners to our disadvantage.

If it were necessary to maintain a certain price in order to maintain protection, then everyone would accept the situation, unless he were a free trader of the pronounced stamp, who advocates shutting up every factory that can not run without protection. But it is a different proposition when a protected factory makes Americans pay for the protection, and then gives foreign countries the benefits of successive cheapening processes. It is all nonsense to talk of the policy as necessary. If the goods can be sold in Paris at 30 per cent less than the price asked for them in New York—

Mark the language—

then they can also be sold in New York at the lower price; and the difference represents the excess of profit which is extorted from the American people.

Protection, like every other institution or policy, must justify itself. Protection in America, for the benefit of European consumers, can not be justified.

That last clause from the Hartford Courant I especially recommend to your tender memories. The Post continues:

There are not many protection newspapers that emulate the candor of the Courant, but a great and growing number show their sympathy with the views of our venerable Hartford contemporary. The American people are too fair to complain of any man or association of men for making money by fair business methods; but they do not believe it is fair for their Congress to legislate millions of money out of the pockets of the consuming masses into the hands of a comparatively few persons. The demand for reform is becoming extremely insistent. A sense of injury too long endured lends a strong coloring of anger to the call for relief.

So much for the old Hartford Courant. Why, from the Federalist and Whig standpoint even at the beginning, at the inauguration of this protective system, nobody ever contemplated the notion that there would be perpetual protection for anything. The first new tariff acts passed in this country were passed for a limited number of years, to expire at the end of that time. Clay and Hamilton and all of them said that they were passed for the purpose of "putting infant industries upon their feet." Ah, above the portals of the Committee on Ways and Means we find the inscription, in letters almost visible, "No infant need enter here." You must have influence—political or financial—power, capital, and then you can get what is called "protection," but what an honest intellect prefers to call legislative favoritism.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so much for the speech of my friend from Illinois.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a few moments?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELL. If the gentleman prefers not, if the time is wanting, I shall not persist. The gentleman has stated that he was a cotton planter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELL. You sell cotton from your cotton-planting districts to the factories of the South and the factories of the North?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Sell to both.

Mr. BOUTELL. And some abroad?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELL. Is there any difference in the selling price to the factories in Mississippi and Massachusetts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not a particle to me in Yazoo City, Miss.

Mr. BOUTELL (continuing). And Manchester?

Mr. WILLIAMS. At the mill here and at the mill in England?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; but no advantage in the price to me—not a particle. The buyer for Fall River, Mass., and the buyer for Manchester, England, both alike pay me the Yazoo City, Miss., market price.

Mr. BOUTELL. I will ask the gentleman a second question. Where the cotton that is sold is made into cotton goods in Manchester and returned in the shape of cotton cloth, white goods, and comes back here, are you in favor of repealing the duty on that cotton cloth?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I favor reducing it somewhat.

Mr. BOUTELL. Are you in favor of repealing it altogether?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, I am not; because I want to raise revenue to run this great, glorious, and expensive Government of ours. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELL. One more question. The gentleman represents a beautiful, rich cotton-growing district of the South, his district one of the richest. I will ask, when plain cotton goods manufactured in those numerous factories in the South that have grown under the beneficent Republican protective policy, the plain white cotton goods, are sent over to Germany and are changed like those watches, are dyed and printed in Germany and come back here, have you any objection to the admission of those cotton goods free?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have just told you that I would have objection to admitting any cotton goods free. We have got to raise a revenue to run this Government. I want not only the consumers of cotton goods, but, as nearly as may practically be, the consumers of all sorts of goods to pay their share of governmental expense, necessary to protect them in life, limb, liberty, and property.

Mr. BOUTELL. Just one more question. In the room of the committee of which we both have the honor to be members, and over which is that inscription which has been quoted by the gentleman, a little infant passed a few months ago, an infant now less than 4 months old—House bill 10076:

A bill to provide for and levy an import duty on Egyptian and other long-staple cotton imported into the United States from foreign countries.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of October, 1906, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all Egyptian and other long-staple cotton imported into the United from foreign countries, in the lint, an import duty at the rate of 10 cents per pound, and upon all Egyptian and other long-staple cotton imported into the United States from foreign countries, in the seed, an import duty at the rate of 4 cents per pound.

Will the gentleman give his opinion as to how we ought to deal with this infant in our committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have very little objection to answering the question. In the first place, this infant has not yet got what is asked for it. In the second place, if my friend from Illinois had listened to me with half the attention and love of being edified that I always indulge in when I listen to him, he would have known that it is a cardinal point of faith with me that a tariff is a tax, and a tax upon the consumer, and that therefore all consumers, as nearly as practicable, ought to pay their part of the tax. I would not have the slightest objection to a tax for revenue only upon cotton imported into the United States, say 5 per cent, or, at the highest, 10 per cent ad valorem. I would have exactly the same objection to a protective duty upon cotton that I would have to a protective duty on any other article.

Now, let me say to the gentleman—and he ought to have known me well enough to have saved me the trouble of saying it—that when I say that taking money by indirect or direct taxation out of one man's pocket in order to make another man prosperous; that prostituting the taxing power, exercised upon all the people, for the benefit of some of the people—i. e., for private use—is immoral, socialistic, and wrong. He ought not to have expected me to think it was any less immoral, any less socialistic, any less wrong if he could concoct some tariff scheme whereby money could be put into my pocket. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And this one would for a time put some money into my pocket, I suppose. If I were cultivating to-day in long-staple cotton every acre of land I have that could produce it, I suppose a bill like that would put into my pocket an increased annual revenue for some time, at any rate—that is, until everybody who could got to raising long-staple cotton. I would vote against that bill, for a very simple reason—it is not a tariff for revenue. It would be a very highly protective tariff, if I understood the gentleman aright, 10 cents a pound on cotton in the lint and 4 cents a pound on cotton in the seed. Was that it?

Mr. BOUTELL. Ten cents a pound for cotton in the lint and 4 cents a pound for cotton in the seed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, cotton of that sort is worth about 15 cents per pound in the lint in the Yazoo market, so that it would be a duty of ten-fifteenths, which would be 66⅔ per cent—not only highly protective, but prohibitive. Not a dollar of the tax would ever get into the Treasury. Moreover it would destroy the market in America for much short-staple cotton, which is used mixed with long-staple Egyptians in the manufacture of certain goods.

Mr. BOUTELL. I am sorry if the gentleman from Mississippi thinks I have led him into a discussion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; it is not that.

Mr. BOUTELL. I have listened to the gentleman's speech without moving from my chair, except to interrupt him for a question, and have listened with all the attention of which my ears and my intellect were capable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My feelings were not hurt by that. My feelings were hurt at the idea that seemed to be lurking in the gentleman's mind, that if there could be found a protective tariff that would put money in my pocket I might be in favor of it.

Mr. BOUTELL. Can we come back to the question as to this particular bill, a practical question, an infant before our committee? I had hoped that the gentleman from Mississippi and myself could agree on favoring that bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can not. I hope we can agree about another thing, and that is that a tariff is a tax on the consumer?

Mr. BOUTELL. Will the gentleman agree with me that we both favor this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, no; I said emphatically that I was opposed to it.

Mr. BOUTELL. The gentleman is opposed to the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely. Do you think I would rob all the poor sewing women and all the dentists and all the bricklayers and all the carpenters of this country to put money into my pocket or the pocket of my constituents? If you do, you mistake me. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi has now said exactly what I knew, with his mental and intellectual integrity, he would say, and I only wish to say in reply that this bill was introduced by one of the most distinguished Democrats in the House, representing a great cotton district, Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, the gentleman from Florida is undoubetedly a Democrat, but his bill is indubitably not Democratic.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, as my name has been mentioned in this discussion, that I introduced that bill which the gentleman from Illinois has produced, because I believe that it is absolutely necessary for the purpose of this Government to have a tariff. I think that is the Democratic position, and I am in favor of levying that tariff where the burdens will be heavier upon the luxuries and where if benefit is to accrue at all it will accrue to the producer as well as to the manufacturer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yielded for a question. I will not yield any further. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will not object himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, having declined to object to the continuation of the tolerably good speech made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] and to the endurably good speech made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], I shall treat myself impartially and not object to the continuation of my own eloquent and wise remarks. [Laughter.]

To continue, Mr. Chairman, there is something that I neglected to read that I wanted to read ere this. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TIRRELL] the other day came to the front to defend the watch companies, and then my friend [Mr. BOUTELL] coming to the front also the flurry reminded a friend of mine of a part of the Acts of the Apostles—Chapter XIX, verses 23 to 28, inclusive—which I will read for the edification of the House. If Members will change the name "Demetrius" into the names "TIRRELL" and "BOUTELL," and change the words "shrine and temple of Diana" into the words "shrine and temple of protectionism," and also change the word "trades" into "specially protected industries" and "Asia" to "America" and the word "idols" or "images" to "schedules in the Dingley bill," they will see how the covey was flushed. I read:

And the same time there arose no small stir about that way.

For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small gain unto the craftsmen—

This is the man who makes tariff schedules for the temple of protectionism, you know—whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, "Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth."

Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that they be no gods which are made with hands—

And that is to be likened to this Democratic voice and this reasonable, common-sense Republican voice, "turning away much people," from the Republican party. I hear a whisper this morning that it has "turned away much people" in Iowa under the call of one Cummins, who called in a very forcible manner—

So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshipeth.

And when they heard these sayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, "Great is Diana, of the Ephesians."

So we seem to have brought the watchmakers to book, at any rate. The idol worship of others (schedule worship) is much to their profit.

Mr. friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] has just handed to me a notice, which I will not read at this time, in the Washington Times, showing how the Juggernaut car of political independence has claimed another victim out in Iowa, and how Cummins is managing things out there and the Secretary of the Treasury is not. "The bloody Tenth" in Iowa—the Gibraltar of Republicanism in that State—has refused to indorse the appointment by the President of Mr. Shaw, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Big Chief of the stand-patter tribe.

Mr. BOUTELL. Will the gentleman now yield to such a question as he said he would consent to yield for?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Pertinent to what I am talking about.

Mr. BOUTELL. I have written it out so as to give the rule in its actual economic terms. May I remind the gentleman from Mississippi of the universally recognized economic law that fixes absolutely, almost mechanically, the limit of the difference in prices at which dealers can sell similar goods in different markets, namely, that the difference in price between the lower market and the higher market can not be greater than the cost of transportation from the lower market to the higher market? I ask that of the gentleman as an economist and not as a party man. Is not that a well-established and universally recognized law?

To illustrate, if American watches are offered for sale in the London market at a less price than they are offered for sale in the New York market, and the difference is greater than the cost of transportation from London to New York, those watches never would be sold in London, but would find their way to New York; if so, cotton is offered at Manchester at a less price than its selling price at Lowell, and the difference is greater than the cost of transportation from Manchester to Lowell, that cotton will find its way to Lowell just as certainly as the waters of the Mississippi find their way to the Gulf, and I know that the gentleman must admit that this law is uniform and universal in operation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is true, as an economic proposition, that under ordinary and normal circumstances, if a man were to sell a given line of goods at London for a price so much lower than the price at which he offered them in New York, as that the price in London plus transportation both ways would not equal the price paid at home, then, of course, those goods might and generally would come back to New York, and that is just exactly what happened in this watch case to a dot, and they would have come back to New York, and did come back to New York, and Keene sold them in New York, and then these people objected to his bringing more of them back to New York, and they furthermore declined to deliver other goods they had contracted to deliver for England, because they find out he is going to bring them back to New York. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, one thing is certain. Those watches were exported, and those watches were reimported, and those watches were sold after they were exported and reimported into the American market. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They were sold in the open market, and everybody knows it. And another thing is true, that to stop this same natural process, the very economic process to which the gentleman calls attention, this company steps into court and in defense to a suit requiring them to deliver the goods sold they plead that the man is going to send them back into America! In other words, the plea itself is a protest against the operation of the very economic law to which the gentleman refers and which the agreement to sell abroad only and not in America was intended to defeat. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL of Connecticut rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I judge that the gentleman desires to force the tariff question to the front; therefore it is very desirable to know where he stands and what he proposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am going to tell you before I get through.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I want to know whether he still stands by the declaration in Everybody's Magazine, supplemented by the statement of the chairman of the last Democratic national convention, Mr. CLARK, and, if the gentleman will pardon me, I will read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman prefer to read an old utterance of mine or to hear some new ones this morning?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I prefer to read the language and——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state this: I do not remember anything in that article in Everybody's Magazine that I would not stand by.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman may have changed in the last two years. Perhaps the gentleman would like to have the country have both, so as to see whether he has changed his position.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman may of course read out a sentence independent of its context, which may modify it to some extent. Now, I will ask, if the gentleman desires, to insert as a part of my remarks my article in Everybody's Magazine. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now I yield to the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, have I consent to insert the article?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The statement was as follows:

The ultimate goal of Democratic striving is "tariff for revenue only." Perhaps it might be said that an ideal Democratic tariff for revenue only would consist in levying import duties upon all or nearly all imports, dividing them, however, into three classes—necessaries of life and of industries; second, comforts, and, third, luxuries. The general principle that protectionism is wrong, morally wrong, and a prostitution of government to private ends, should never be forgotten; the goal ought not to be lost sight of.

That is supplemented by the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, as president of the last Democratic national convention, as follows——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman ought to take up my time, except for the purpose for which I have yielded, to wit, to read what I wrote in the article.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman has unlimited time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I have not unlimited strength.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut (reading):

The true Democratic position on the tariff——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do not read me what Mr. CLARK says. That has nothing to do with the matter. CHAMP CLARK generally says the right thing anyhow. Do not read me the balance. You have read what I have said. I stand by every word of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I decline to be interrupted any more. I decline to have the whole Democratic campaign book read to me now.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will answer the gentleman a question.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Last year we imported $570,000,000 of goods dutiable, and $517,000,000 on which no payment of duty was made. Would the gentleman put a duty on that $517,000,000 of free goods imported last year in accordance with that declaration?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That brings it all back to the same thing. Because descanting on that very matter later on, in that same article, in dealing with it in what I hope is a practical, common-sense way that I try to make a characteristic of mine, I go on to show that, while that is the goal toward which we would look, while that is the ideal Democratic tariff, that there is nobody so lacking in common sense as to think we can reach it all at once in one act.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman evades the question. Both he and his colleague, the president of the last national Democratic convention, declared that duty should be laid on all articles for revenue. Then I ask him now fairly and frankly if that is the Democratic policy, and if that party is successful in the next campaign, would he put a duty on that $517,000,000 worth of importations that under the Republican system was admitted free into this country?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, my answer to that will be twofold. First, of course I would not revolutionize the business of this entire country by doing all that at once. I would begin the work though and carry it as far at once as actual conditions confronting me would permit, meantime reducing prohibitive, trust-engendering duties, thus gradually equalizing taxes on consumers.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, please sit down. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Connecticut frequently makes me look like I am convinced, in consonance with his opinion, because he is so persistent that frequently I would rather appear to be wrong than argue with him much longer. [Laughter.] Now, then, that is the first answer to it. The second answer is this: Suppose we did. Suppose we did? What quarrel could any Republican have with us about it? If a tariff be in and of itself a blessing and not a mere necessary evil like all other taxes; if taxes on imports are in and of themselves blessings, why not have the blessing made universal and tariff taxes provided on everything?

Now, to go back in connection with that, because it makes me think of something which, when the gentleman from Florida and the gentleman from Illinois a moment ago were talking and had interrupted me, I had intended to say. To complete my reply to the gentleman from Illinois I will say that I see no equitable reason why the factory which consumes wool should pay a tax upon its wool and make the consumers who buy woolen goods from it pay taxes to carry on the Government or to them on the woolen goods, in the price of which the tariff on raw wool is a factor, and the manufacturer who consumes cotton should be free of any taxes upon the cotton which he uses, which he is consuming for making cloth, thus leaving the man who consumes the cotton cloth free of the tax upon cotton which enters into the cloth. I want to say that I can see no good Democratic reason, for example, why the consumer of coffee should pay a tax (if he did; he does not) and why the consumer of tea should not pay a tax, or why both should be exempt from paying taxes to carry on the Federal Government while the person who puts sugar in his coffee or tea does pay a tax. Now, then, if the gentleman had let me alone, after a while I was going to reach all that, and at the right place of coming to it, and much more satisfactorily to him.

Now, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at the end of my remarks when I shall have completed them that article written by me for Everybody's Magazine, if I can find it. I very much fear I have lost it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to insert a certain article in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to add that I will stand to it as the very slogan of pure Democracy, undefiled, as understood by me, both in what it expresses about the ideal ultimately to be consummated—the goal ultimately to be reached—and in the conservative, safe, and gradual manner of reaching it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question that I would like to go with the answer. When was that article published?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have forgotten the date; I doubt if I have one, but perhaps the gentleman from Connecticut can tell you. It seems to have struck him. It was some time in 1903.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. 1904.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was at the beginning of the last Congress.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Just before the St. Louis convention.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Right after I was elected floor leader on this side.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. In February, 1904.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I was going to suggest this: I know how it struck the gentleman from Connecticut. The question I would like to ask the gentleman is this: How that article struck the people of the country? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; a statesmanlike question! I have an impression, Mr. Chairman, that if we could have fought this last campaign upon the line of a common-sense and sensible reduction and revision of the tariff, to prevent the exploitation of home consumers by concerns which exploit them under the shelter of a tariff while they sell cheaper to the foreigner, and on the very lines laid down in that article we would have won the election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And I have another idea, and I will give it to the gentleman now: That the personality of your candidate and our disorganization had more to do with your last overwhelming victory than the strength of your party. And I have another idea, and I will give it to the gentleman now, and it is more a wonderment than an idea: I am wondering, and sometimes dreaming, of what will happen to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS], and all the other leaders of the cohorts of "stand-patism," when toward the tail end of this session, or during the next session of this Congress, the man in the White House—who carried your party to victory rather than the party carried him—shall send a message to this House to revise and reduce the tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is in the air that he wanted to do it before this. It was asserted in the newspapers—I do not know whether it was true or not, I hope not—that there was some sort of an agreement between him and the Speaker whereby he must hold back the opening of this box with all these serpents of discord—this Pandora's box—from being turned loose amongst the House and Senate members of the Republican party, provided the Speaker, who did not want the box opened, would first help him get through certain things that he considered of primary and paramount importance at this moment. Let me tell you something: You have got to revise this tariff. If you don't, we will. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Because our common masters, the people of America, have made up their minds that it shall be revised.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I have waited.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know; but you can wait longer. It will do you good, because what I am saying to you may be a light whereby to guide your footsteps. You are not old in iniquity, like a lot of these other fellows. You can still take advice and counsel, and you are young enough and supple enough and mentally elastic enough to profit by it. They are not; they are doomed; they are riding to their fall. One by one they will go down. But there is a future in you; there is hope for you. [Laughter.] You not only wear optimism in your face, but you wear optimism in your heart, and you are flexible, and when you see the handwriting on the wall your reason will teach you to bend somewhat from your present and past course, in order to adopt a wiser course in the future. In fact, the main object of my making this speech to-day is to appeal to you and young men like you, now, "in the days of your youth, while the evil days draw not nigh," to fix yourselves in the direction in which you shall grow for future usefulness in the political field. [Laughter and applause.] For I tell you that every man who worships the schedules of the Dingley bill as an idol in the Temple of Diana is doomed to defeat. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not now, perhaps; not all of them in the very next election; some of them then—enough of them to give us the House—unless you revise the tariff at this session or the next session of this Congress. I will tell you another thing; I am going to tell you a whole lot of things. You have got to pass a bill to admit Oklahoma and the Indian Territory as a State in this Union, and leave Arizona and New Mexico uncoupled. For if you don't, we will, because the people, your masters and our masters, have made up their minds upon that point. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I will tell you another thing. Your Republican Senate has got to pass a reasonable and right and just railroad rate bill, and if you don't, then that is another thing that we will do by the people's commission. Like these other things I have mentioned, it is our policy, not yours. I am not boasting of our strength, Mr. Chairman. I regret our weakness. I hope it is a weakness of the past. I notice more of homogeneity amongst Democrats, more commonness of purpose, more unity of action than there has been in a long, long time. I am not predicating these expectations, however, so much upon our strength before the country as I am upon your weakness, upon the demonstrated fact that you have neither the intellect nor the courage to take the bull by the horns and do the people's work yourselves. As surely as there is a sun in heaven unless you do it the people will commission somebody else to do it.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I should like to ask the gentleman what there is in the record of the Democratic party on the tariff question that would lead him to suppose that the people will intrust that work to the Democratic party?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, of course it is perfectly justifiable, a trick of debate, to dislocate the order of a man's argument and bring things into the wrong place. The gentleman is a skillful debater. But the gentleman from Indiana asks me what there is in the past of the Democratic party to justify the trusting of the power to its hands——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. To justify the people in turning over a revision of the tariff to the Democratic party.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, I will confine myself to that question. I am glad the question is restricted, because if I had to go into everything good about the Democracy in its glorious day of just and equal government, it might have been a speech too long for my strength.

I have heard a great deal of boasting lately about the growth of the country in the last census decade—the decade between 1890 and 1900. There are people who see nothing except what is before their noses and know nothing about what has taken place in the past. I want now to call the gentleman's attention to a comparison between the record made by this country under Democratic tariffs—the tariff of 1842 and the tariff of 1857 in very many particulars—and I want to contrast that rate of increase and growth with this "great and unparalleled 'Republican' prosperity" about which you are boasting every day. You do not seem to be aware of the fact that this country has a history as well as a present.

Now, let us take corn, the great basic product of agriculture in the Middle West—the country of the gentleman from Indiana. From 1850 to 1860, under tariffs for revenue only—and I quote these figures from Professor Conner, who gives the census reports—from 1850 to 1860 there was an increase of 41.7 in the corn production of the United States. The decade beginning in 1880 to 1890, under a Republican tariff, there was an increase of only 21 per cent. In the decade beginning in 1890 and ending in 1900 there was an increase of only 25.6 per cent.

In the decade from 1840 to 1850, under a Democratic tariff, the railroad mileage of this country increased from 2,800 in round numbers to 9,000 miles in round numbers, an increase of over 300 per cent.

From 1850 to 1860, under Democratic tariffs, the railway mileage increased from 9,000 in round numbers to 30,600 in round numbers, an increase of over 300 per cent. In the decade from 1890 to 1900—your boasted decade—the railroad mileage went up from 163,500 miles in round numbers to 193,500 miles in round numbers. That is an increase of 30,000 miles on a basis of 160,000 miles, the percentage of which I can not calculate in my head at this moment—say, 19 per cent.

Now, coming to the growth of the manufacturing industries of the country—because if the tariff favors any class of industry over and above all others and at the expense of nearly all others it is the manufacturing industries—I will show you what a Democratic tariff with low duties has done, in comparison with your tariff with high duties for the aggregate of manufactures throughout the country. Of course in your tariff you hothouse a few industries into a degree of wealth that no industry could reach in any normal and natural way by only natural profits. We can not hope and do not desire to compete with you in that respect. The following is a statement of contrast for the entire manufacturing business of the country. The growth of all the manufacturing industries of the United States since 1860—and this is a quotation from Carroll D. Wright's Industrial Evolution of the United States, page 159.

"In 1850 the capital employed in manufacturing in the United States was $533,000,000" in round numbers. "In 1860 it had gone up to $1,009,000,000" in round numbers, an increase of nearly 100 per cent, or, to be perfectly accurate, an increase of 89.4 per cent. From 1890 to 1900, this boasted era of yours, the increase was from $6,500,000,000 to $9,800,000,000, or an increase of 50.7 as against an increase of 89.4 per cent, a little over half as great an increase under a protective as it was under a revenue tariff.

Now, let us take the manufacturing products. From 1850 to 1860 the increase was 85.1. From 1890 to 1900 the increase was 38.9 per cent only, or less than half as much. There is the history of the progress of the agricultural and of the manufacturing interests under a Democratic tariff and under a Republican tariff.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me to give him some figures?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield for a question, but I can not yield for a statement.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I want the gentleman to let me give the figures for wheat and corn value in 1895, under the Wilson tariff, and for 1905, under the Dingley tariff.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I will not yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES] to make the statement which he would make. I think it is not altogether ingenuous to take a year when the country was just coming out of an immense panic and compare it with a year eleven years afterwards when it had recuperated and got upon its feet. I could go back, for example, and take the year 1816 or the year 1846 or the year 1857 or 1867 or 1873, or a year one or two years after either of these, and compare any one of those years of panic, or years immediately after panic, with some other year selected by me very much to the disadvantage of the former years. Panics come and panics go, and when panics come prices fall and people do not get the cost of production upon hardly anything they raise in agriculture or produce in manufacture or take out of the mines; then after the panic is gone it takes a year or two for the country to retrieve itself and get upon its normal footing.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, has not the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], in his figures which he has given the committee, taken the period immediately following the civil war?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I did not. I took the last census report, from 1890 to 1900.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. But the gentleman did play the partridge on the period in which the Democratic party had control of this Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What period was that? Will the gentleman tell me the decade the Democratic party has been in power?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I did not say decade. I said the period during which the Democratic party had control of the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The two years during which the Democratic party was in power?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, pshaw! Mr. Chairman, I am bound to compare by census figures. I have not the figures for 1893 and 1894, and the gentleman has them not, and he can not get them of an authoritative character. Besides, the first year—1893—was an exceptional year—a panic year—like 1867 and 1873, and, like them, under a Republican tariff. Times were easier in 1894, after the Republican tariff had been repealed by the passage of the Wilson-Gorman bill, but still the full effect of Republican legislation, both tariff and financial, had not yet entirely passed away. I have the census reports, which come out once in ten years, and those are used because they are authoritative, and I have compared ten-year period with ten-year period, and I have taken the ten-year period under the highest protective tariff the country ever saw, and I have taken the ten-year period under the lowest revenue tariff the country ever saw, and I have compared those two sets of figures with one another.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to suggest to the gentleman that, taking the ten-year period from 1875 to 1884, the average price of wheat in the United States was 94.12 cents a bushel. During the next ten-year period, from 1885 to 1894, inclusive, the average price of wheat was 70.93 cents a bushel, and for the last ten-year period, from 1895 to 1904, it was only 67.01 cents a bushel. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Here is the article referred to by Mr. HILL of Connecticut and inserted in whole at Mr. WILLIAMS's request, in reply to Mr. HILL's question concerning a portion of it. It was published in the February number, 1904, of Everybody's Magazine. [Prolonged applause.]

"WHAT DEMOCRACY STANDS FOR.

"The two great parties are fundamentally divided as Jefferson and Hamilton were. Issues change with changing conditions from year to year, but issues are, after all, but the application of fundamental principles to conditions.

"As to the tariff, the Democratic party stands for the principle that protectionism is a system of taxation whereby many are robbed in order that a few may be hothoused by legislation into artificial prosperity. The method whereby 'protection' does this is by deflecting capital and labor from naturally profitable pursuits into pursuits made by legislation profitable, pursuits which without legislation would have been less profitable or perhaps not profitable at all.

"The ultimate goal of Democratic striving is 'tariff for revenue only,' but in the striving toward this goal common sense, good judgment, and conservatism will prevail and time will enter as a factor. Perhaps it might be said that an ideal 'Democratic tariff for revenue only' would consist in levying import duties upon all or nearly all imports, dividing them, however, into three classes—first, necessaries of life and necessaries of industries; secondly, comforts; and, third, luxuries.

"THE REFORMER MUST GO SLOW.

"The general principle that protectionism is wrong, morally wrong, a prostitution of government for private ends, should never be forgotten; the goal ought not to be lost sight of. At the same time friends of tariff reform would not strike down in a revolutionary way, 'over night,' as the Germans say, all the scaffolding which the false system has erected. Even in Great Britain, where free trade was and is possible, free trade was not reached in that way. Duties were reduced amidst the dismal predictions of the advocates of protectionism that 'destruction and ruin,' 'starvation and poverty,' would follow. Destruction, ruin, starvation, and poverty did not follow after the duty was removed. Object lesson after object lesson was thus furnished to the people of the falsity of the claims of the advocates of the old system.

"In this country, owing to the decision of the Supreme Court in the income-tax case, founded on the provision in the Constitution of the United States about direct taxes, the goal can not be, as it was in Great Britain, free trade. 'A tariff for revenue, to carry on a government economically and effectively administered,' becomes the American tariff reformer's goal. It must be kept in mind until it is reached, but it must be reached by the exercise of wisdom and good sense. The tariff reformer who would do things recklessly or too suddenly would run the risk of destroying the very end which he had in contemplation, by furnishing object lessons, which would not help, but would hurt him, and in consequence of which he and those of his opinion might be hurled out of place and deprived of the power of doing anything.

"There is also a tariff revision by piecemeal, which is a handmaiden of the other system. It is very important in its place, although it ought never to be permitted to handicap the larger movement by general legislation. This is tariff revision by reciprocal trade agreements with other nations. I have always thought that there ought to be about every tariff law some degree of elasticity—a maximum and a minimum—a margin within which, by international trading and bartering, the friends of untrammeled, or comparatively untrammeled, commerce could be rewarded for the admission of our farm and mining products free, or nearly free, encouraged to continue in their course, and others encouraged to imitate it; and whereby also, incident to the rewarding of these, peoples pursuing an inimical course toward our commerce could be punished. They could not complain, because they would not be punished directly—indeed, punishment would not be the end in view. They would be punished by their own act, and their punishment could be remitted by their own act.

"Much can be done along this piecemeal line of tariff revision under a Democratic, or approximately Democratic, law. Some things along this line can be done even under the Dingley law, with nothing but the small 20 per cent margin of elasticity given in that act. Chamberlainism in England and in her colonies can be killed a-borning by a wisely executed policy of that sort, and with an advantage incalculable to American producers, whether on the farm, in the mine, or in the factory, while at the same time benefiting American consumers of British products to the extent of 20 per cent. The framers of the Dingley bill themselves confessed that they had placed the duties on a level 20 per cent higher than was necessary, even in their own opinions and from their standpoint—that of high protectionism. They made this confession when they inserted in the bill section 4, which authorizes a reduction of 20 per cent to be made upon all articles and commodities upon the dutiable list by international agreement in certain international contingencies.

"Were we to pass a law to-morrow giving this differential advantage of 20 per cent to all such countries as do now or may hereafter admit duty free the growth and product of our farms and mines—so-called 'natural products'—the selfish appeal which Mr. Chamberlain is now making in Great Britain, with a view of placing import duties upon natural products admitted into the British market, except when such natural products are sent from British colonies, would receive its counter blast and countercheck. It is needless here to say that over half of the entire exports of the natural products of the American people are sent to the British market. Other countries maintaining a free-trade, or an approximately free-trade, system in regard to natural products would likewise be encouraged to continue their present policy and not to diverge from it into the pathway of commercial warfare. Still others would be encouraged to inaugurate such a policy. The American farmer would find a guaranty of the retention of present markets and the opening up of new markets. The price of his product in the foreign market being lower than now, owing to the removal of international tolls, he would find himself enabled thereby to sell a very much larger quantity of goods than formerly at the same profit heretofore obtained by him.

"THE DEMOCRATIC IDEA.

"The Democratic tariff idea, like anything else Democratic, is founded as nearly as possible upon the principle of 'equality of opportunities and equality of burdens.' This same principle extended to other matters of anticipated legislation will give you what Democracy means, or ought to mean, with regard to them. It stands for equality of charges by railroads and transportation companies, with destruction of the power of secret rebates or open discrimination, whether against corporations or localities. Neither Government nor Government-created corporations ought to be permitted to encourage or continue in a course of favoritism to any individual, any interest, or any locality.

"A Democratic interstate and foreign commerce committee would produce a bill under which some things that we now see could not happen; it would be made impossible, for example, for the great railway systems to make a rebate of 33⅓ per cent upon iron and steel and the products of iron and steel, when carried for export, and recoup for that reduction by increasing freight charges on commodities from Chicago to the seaboard 2 per cent. This system whereby the railroads assist the steel trust in selling its goods much cheaper to the dealer abroad than the dealer at home, much cheaper to the foreign shipbuilder than to the American shipbuilder, would be destroyed just to the extent that the railroad rebate in favor of its products when exported, as against the same products when exported, as against the same products when disposed of at home, would be removed.

"A Democratic tariff law would now, even from the beginning, contain rates of duty more above a mere revenue point, in cases where it is so self-evident that the existing duty serves only the purpose of home extortion, as it is in those where the producer here, still receiving the benefit in the home market of the tariff tax, is actually selling abroad in competition with so-called "pauper labor." The fact that he can do so makes self-evident the lack of need for the tax for any other than a revenue purpose, even from a protectionist's standpoint.

"A Democratic interstate-commerce bill would give to the Interstate Commerce Commission many of the powers which it has been vainly asking of a Republican Congress. The child's play which is exhibited now in that the Interstate Commerce Commission, though legally empowered to pronounce a given rate of charge unreasonable, yet lacks the power to say what rate in its stead would be reasonable, would then come to an end; and the further child's play of maintaining a rate decided excessive by the Interstate Commerce Commission, during the pendency of railroad-instigated litigation, would also cease.

"The same old principle of Democratic equality, or approximate equality, of benefit and of burden, ought to show that the Democratic party could not very well stand in finance for the Aldrich bill or the Fowler bill—certainly not for any proposition looking toward the giving out for circulation of Government-guaranteed currency upon the deposit of the bonds of private corporations—thus making the Government a partner in the affairs and in the maintenance of the credit of a few selected, and therefore favored, bond-issuing corporations. The same principle, when applied to the present system of Government deposits, which national banks would teach, or ought to teach, that the Government ought not virtually to lend its money free—would teach, or ought to teach, that if Government money is to be deposited in banks at all (and with a revenue far beyond the needs of an economical, or even of the present extravagant Government, that seems a present necessity in order not to starve commerce and industry by lack of cash), then the deposits ought to be made upon some system whereby there could be secured, first, undoubted, gilt-edged, and infallible security for the return of the principal deposited, and, secondly, in such banks, as, having given that security, should, by competitive bid, offer for the deposit the highest rate of interest. Nor is there any Democratic reason why Government deposits, amply secured in some such way as I have indicated, should be confined to national banks alone, it being apparent that the security which ought to be deposited in the Government vaults in return for the money deposited in the bank vaults would be, as above indicated, a self-sufficing security, totally independent of the bank's future solvency or insolvency.

"Talking about depositaries and their security; except the miraculous construction by the President and his Administration of the treaty with Colombia, whereby the pledge of the United States to 'guarantee the sovereignty of Colombia' over the transisthmian strip was construed to mean a promise to upset that sovereignty by preventing Colombia from enforcing it, there is nothing quite so marvellous as the construction which the Secretary of the Treasury gave to section 5153 of the Revised Statutes. The language of that section is this: 'The Secretary of the Treasury shall require the associations thus designated' (meaning the depositaries) 'to give satisfactory security by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise * * * .' The Secretary of the Treasury simply and calmly scratched out the word 'and' and inserted the word 'or' in lieu thereof.

"I am asked: 'Is there now a live issue in abating trusts?' Of course there is. It has been proven that trusts are not quite the 'get-rich-quick' concerns which many innocent and gullible people, misled by exploiting swindlers authorized by law to swindle, once thought them to be. Any concern of the gigantic magnitude of one of the great combinations of corporations called a 'trust' must necessarily, to a large extent, do without the restraining and economizing 'eye of the master,' and it must, moreover, be managed, in a large measure, without regard to that most important factor of all business, the known private character of the man immediately supervising and controlling. This all being true, it is but natural that a great deal of water should in the natural course of inevitable exposure, have been squeezed out of the trusts; but it still remains true that a system of law regulating interstate commerce, which permits public cheats and swindles of the Jersey-born variety to go untrammeled and unwhipped of justice, is a grave thing and ought to constitute an issue, whether it does or not.

"EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES IN THE PHILIPPINES.

"The same great Democratic principle of equality applied to the Philippine Islands will give as a result of its application the Democratic policy there. The Philippine Islands ought not to be retained as a part of the American body politic, because, from the very nature of the population—alien and inimical—they can not, with safety to our rule, be given 'equal opportunities' and subjected only to 'equal burdens.' A country which has been afflicted, as this has been, from the landing of the first slave ship at Jamestown down to now, with an apparently insoluble race problem, ought never to have annexed another, and, having annexed it, ought to 'unannex' it just as soon as practicable; that is, just as soon as the waste places have been reoccupied by the people of the country and that people set upon their feet.

"On the other hand, if, in spite of all the lessons of history, they are to be retained anythow, then in their trade relations with the people of the balance of the United States, and with regard to their natural rights, they should have 'equal opportunities and equal burdens' under the flag and under the Constitution. They should be permitted to grow rich as we have grown rich, by sharing the magnificent benefits of free trade between all parts of the Union.

"I say with regard to their natural rights. I do not say with regard to the statutory privilege of the suffrage, which is a different thing and ought never to be conferred save in the interest of organized society's chief aim—good government. I refer to the 'God-given' rights of the individual as such and as a factor in industrialism, chief of all the right to earn an honest living in the sweat of one's brow.

"As to the isthmian canal question, the Democracy wants a canal. It wanted it, by an overwhelming majority within its ranks, at Nicaragua, because of the natural advantages of that route, regardless of the first cost. The main benefits, in my opinion, to be looked for in a transisthmian canal are: First, in connection with our intercoastal trade—trade between the Atlantic and Gulf on the east and the Pacific ports on the west—furnishing a cheap waterway, competition with transcontinental railroads; second, in connection with increased naval strength and efficiency—enabling Gulf and Atlantic squadrons on the one side and Pacific squadrons on the other to concentrate without the necessity of going around the Horn. The question of first cost is a mere bagatelle in contrast with the attainment of these two great ends.

"The great transcontinental railways, however—all of their henchmen and a great many innocent persons who have been misled by them—have deflected public opinion toward Panama, because Panama, being so very much farther in distance and in time necessary for intercoastal voyages, furnishes very much less competition to them in their transcontinental business than a canal at Nicaragua would. The Democracy, however, is for a canal and is willing to take a canal even at Panama, because it can not get the other, and because it will do the American Navy, American commerce, and American industry a vast deal of good even there.

"The party is not going to permit itself to be thrown by its enemies into an anticanal attitude.

"RECKLESS INTERNATIONAL CONDUCT.

"On the other hand, it is not going to permit itself to be thrown by anyone into the attitude of condoning the infinitely reckless disregard of international law, rights of nation and customs of civilization illustrated in our recent connection with the birth of the mushroom Republic of Panama—a birth evidently foreseen, provided for, and aided. We are not responsible for what the Republican Administration has already done; we do not indorse it; we do not condone it. We warn it, in the interest of business, in the interest of the people, and in the interest of the peace of the world, against the danger of future repetitions of this sort of rough-rider, all-too-sudden, and superlatively reckless international conduct. It might be a government able and willing to resent insult—to lift a gauntlet insolently flung down. A child with a lighted torch in a powder magazine is a dangerous thing. The Presidential cannon is a dangerous weapon to play with, especially when the man, amusing himself by firing it off, sits astride the cannon, with his face to the breech and his back to the muzzle, and sees nothing that is or might be in front of the gun.

"It is said that the so-called Republic of Panama is an accomplished fact. France repeats that it is 'un fait accompli.' We want it distinctly understood that we had nothing to do with the 'accomplishment,' and are not proud of the part our country took in it. It has been, or soon will be, recognized as one of the 'independent nations of the earth' by our Government, by France, by Great Britain, by Germany, and by Russia. Recognition was marvelously sudden in comparison with the failure to recognize even belligerent rights for the Republic of Cuba or independence for the Boer Republic in South Africa. Amongst honest men, who believe in certain recognized, fundamental principles of international dealings, the so-called Republic of Panama is an abortion—misbegotten, hagborn—a misshapen Caliban among the 'independent nations' of the earth.

"As to the sin and unscrupulousness of it, that is the affair of the Republican Administration; it is not ours. We shall hope that the President of the United States will yet obey the plain letter of the law, as expressed in the Spooner Act, and give the American people a canal where they ought to have it—at Nicaragua. But if not, and we are forced to forego that desire and to take our canal at Panama, we want it. In taking it there, and in recognizing 'accomplished facts,' we can not in the minds of just men anywhere be held chargeable with the manner of their accomplishment."

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Why does not the gentleman finish his speech to-morrow?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I believe, if the House would indulge me, I would rather finish to-morrow, as I am not as well as I might be.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I have unanimous consent to conclude, but I would like to have the House adjourn now and allow me to conclude to-morrow.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I think I must object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor now.

Mr. LAMB. There are other gentlemen to whom I have promised time. We have already agreed, Mr. Chairman, to go into debate under the five-minute rule at half past 3 to-morrow.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Mississippi has been interrupted in his remarks and has been very courteous in permitting interruptions, and I do not think it is any more than fair that he be permitted to conclude his remarks when he is physically able.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the floor now, and if he yields for a motion to adjourn, he will have the floor when the House meets to-morrow.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I was going to suggest we could adjourn until 11 o'clock——

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I would rather not do that. Mr. Chairman, I now have the floor, and have unlimited time, and I will yield for a motion that the committee rise, and for a motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

And the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 18537—the agricultural appropriation bill—and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 11037. An act relating to the transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5872. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to employ additional laborers and mechanics at the navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5872. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to employ additional laborers and mechanics at the navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 18025. An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17217. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," regulating proceedings for condemnation of land for streets; and

H. R. 11490. An act granting the Edison Electric Company a permit to occupy certain lands for electric power plants in the San Bernardino, Sierra, and San Gabriel forest reserves, in the State of California.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15911) to amend the laws of the United States relating to registration of trade-marks, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing submitting an estimate of appropriation for labor and expenses—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for the Bureau of Fisheries—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of survey of the harbor at Two Rivers, Wis.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed, with accompanying illustrations.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of the Mississippi River between Ashport, Tenn., and Fort Pillow, and from Ashport east—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for relief of George M. Esterly, of Valdez, Alaska—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the president of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission submitting an estimate of appropriation for payment of the claim of Rosalia de Torres de Larrieur—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BENNET of New York, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 17349, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 18713) to validate certain certificates of naturalization, accompanied by a report (No. 3632); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DIXON of Montana, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17114) to provide for the disposition, under the public land laws, of the lands in the abandoned Fort Shaw Military Reservation, Mont., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3633); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18376) to authorize the Minnesota, Dakota and Pacific Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3634); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18673) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3635); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 59) providing for the establishment of a uniform building line on streets in the District of Columbia less than 90 feet in width, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3636); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LONGWORTH, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5131) incorporating the Archæological Institute of America, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3637); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. OVERSTREET, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2140) to authorize the Postmaster-General to dispose of useless papers in post-offices, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3638); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McGUIRE: A bill (H. R. 18707) creating and establishing a Territorial park in Woods County, Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. HUGHES: A bill (H. R. 18708) to provide for the removal of prosecutions for capital offenses from State to Federal courts in certain cases—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PALMER: A bill (H. R. 18710) to regulate appeals in cases of contempt—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: A bill (H. R. 18711) to subject the mineral lands on the Indian reservations in the United States and Territories to location, operation, development, and entry under the mining laws of the United States—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 18712) to regulate the price of mileage tickets on railway transportation companies doing an interstate-commerce business, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BENNET of New York, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization: A bill (H. R. 18713) to validate certain certificates of naturalization—to the House Calendar.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 18714) authorizing the President to negotiate trade contracts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 18715) apportioning the cost of the new Anacostia Bridge and providing means for the collection thereof—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 18716) to extend the authority of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia over all street railway companies operating in the streets of the city of Washington—to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Also, a bill (H. R. 18717) authorizing and directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to extend Monroe street, in Anacostia, and construct a bridge or viaduct, and provide for the assessment of certain costs of construction and repair—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LIVINGSTON: A bill (H. R. 18718) to acquire certain lands in Washington Heights for a public park and site for the McClellan statue—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 18719) regulating the assessment of real estate in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 5949) granting an increase of pension to George F. White.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 5950) granting an increase of pension to Wade H. Powers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the Public Printer from $4,500 to $6,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $600 to pay J. F. Siebert, Parker Williams, and William McCaffery for extra services rendered to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BUILDINGS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, AND COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 5773) to provide a site and buildings for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, the whole of squares Nos. 226, 227, 228, 229, and 230, in the city of Washington, and appropriates $3,000,000 to pay for the land so acquired and toward the erection of one or two buildings thereon.

The bill further creates a commission, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, to report to Congress preliminary plans and an estimate of cost for one or two buildings to be erected on the site for the use of the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor, and for other governmental purposes, the preliminary plans and estimate of cost to be paid for out of the appropriation therein made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 13245. An act to correct the military record of Henry Gude was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 15140. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of John McCauley, alias John H. Hayes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 18709. An act making additional appropriations for the public service on account of earthquake and attending conflagration on the Pacific coast was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CLAPP obtained the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CLAPP. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5796) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River and to establish it as a post-road.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Excelsior Springs Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct a railroad, wagon, and foot bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point on the north boundary line of Kansas City, Mo., to a point opposite the said Kansas City, Mo., on the north side of said river, in Clay County, in the State of Missouri, said bridge to be so placed as to be erected between what is known as Delaware street and Lydia avenue, in Kansas City, Mo., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CLAPP. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5530) authorizing the procuring of additional land for the enlargement of the site for the public building at Kalamazoo, Mich.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, additional land for the enlargement of the site of the Federal building in the city of Kalamazoo, Mich., for the purpose of affording means for the future enlargement of the building to meet the necessities of the public business, and appropriates $12,000 for such additional land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREIGN-BUILT DREDGES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 395) concerning foreign-built dredges.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would invite the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], who filed a memorandum concerning this bill with the Secretary.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] has withdrawn his objection to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out the proviso after the words "United States," in line 5, in the following words:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to any foreign-built dredges now at work under contract in the waters of the United States.

And to insert the following:

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to document as vessels of the United States the foreign-built dredges Holm, Leviathan, Nereus, and Triton, owned by American citizens and now employed at Galveston, and the dredge Sea Lion, now under construction abroad for use at Galveston, on which an American citizen, the contractor at Galveston, has an option.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a foreign-built dredge shall not, under penalty of forfeiture, engage in dredging in the United States unless documented as a vessel of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15331, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15331) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota how much longer the consideration of this bill will perhaps require?

Mr. CLAPP. It ought to take perhaps half an hour, or it may be an hour.

Mr. FORAKER. Then we will get through with it soon.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 14, line 20, in the appropriation for purchase of Indian supplies, I move to strike out "$60,000" and to insert the word "and;" in line 21 to change the capital "F" in "For" to a small letter "f;" in line 23 to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$230,000;" and to add, after the word "dollars," "and warehouses for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service shall be maintained at the following places: New York, Chicago, Omaha, St. Louis, and San Francisco."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to strike out the first five lines on page 71, in the following words:

MISSOURI.

To maintain at the city of St. Louis, Mo., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service, $10,000.

Mr. WARNER. I hope the chairman of the committee will not insist upon that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. A general provision has just been adopted covering everything.

Mr. CLAPP. The necessity for this clause has been obviated by the provision for all warehouses in the one item of $230,000. In that item St. Louis is designated as one of the warehouse towns.

Mr. WARNER. It is already designated?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; and we do the same with Omaha, and the same with San Francisco.

Mr. WARNER. That is satisfactory. I did not understand it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 24 I move to strike out the clause beginning in line 8, in the following words:

To maintain at the city of San Francisco, Cal., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. At the top of page 86, I move to strike out all down to and including line 4, in the following words:

To maintain at the city of Omaha, Nebr., in the discretion of the Secretary, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "patented," in line 6, page 156, insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to pay in behalf of Ann Francis, a Chippewa Indian woman, and lineal decendant of Bow-Kow-Ton-den, for printing record in the case of Francis v. Francis, now pending in the Supreme Court, involving her title to land claimed under treaty and patent, and such briefs as may be necessary therein, $175, or as much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer an amendment to come in on page 84. This amendment is offered for and in behalf of my colleague [Mr. CLARK of Montana], a member of the committee, who is unavoidably absent to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. After line 20, page 84, insert:

FLATHEAD RESERVATION.

That the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," as amended by section 9 of the act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat. L., p. 1048), be amended by adding the following sections:

"SEC. 17. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to reserve and set aside for town-site purposes, and to survey, lay out, and plat into town lots, streets, alleys, and parks, not less than 40 acres of said land at or near each of the present settlements of Arlee, Dayton, Ravalli, Dixon, and Ronan, and not less than 80 acres at the present settlements of St. Ignatius and Polson, and at such other places as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary or convenient for town sites, in such manner as will best subserve the present needs and the reasonable prospective growth of said settlements.

"Such town sites shall be surveyed, appraised, and disposed of as provided in section 2381 of the United States Revised Statutes: Provided, That any person who, at the date when the appraisers commence their work upon the land, shall be an actual resident upon any one such lot and the owner of substantial and permanent improvements thereon, and who shall maintain his or her residence and improvements on such lots to the date of his or her application to enter, shall be entitled to enter, at any time prior to the day fixed for the public sale and at the appraised value thereof, such lot and any one additional lot of which he or she may also be in possession and upon which he or she may have substantial and permanent improvements: Provided further, That before making entry of any such lot or lots the applicant shall make proof, to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land district in which the land lies, of such residence, possession, and ownership of improvements, under such regulations as to time, notice, manner, and character of proof as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That in making their appraisal of the lots so surveyed it shall be the duty of the appraisers to ascertain the names of the residents upon and occupants of any such lots, the character and extent of the improvements thereon, and the name of the reputed owner thereof, and to report their findings in connection with their report of appraisal, which report of findings shall be taken as prima facie evidence of the facts therein set out. All such lots not so entered prior to the day fixed for the public sale shall be offered at public outcry in their regular order, with the other unimproved and unoccupied lots. That no lot shall be sold for less than $10: And provided further, That said lots, when surveyed, shall approximate 50 by 150 feet in size.

"SEC. 18. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to reserve and set aside 160 acres of land at and surrounding the present hot springs, situated on said reservation near the settlement of Camas.

"That said hot springs and the said 160 acres of land last mentioned shall be under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, but any and all moneys that shall be derived from such use shall be for the benefit of the persons holding tribal relations with said tribes of Indians, the same to be disbursed as provided in section 13 of this act.

"SEC. 19. That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive any of said Indians or said persons or corporations, to whom the use of land is granted by the act, of the use of water appropriated and used by them for the necessary irrigation of their lands or for domestic use or any ditches, dams, flumes, reservoirs constructed and used by them in the appropriation and use of said water.

"SEC. 20. That there is hereby appropriated, for the survey, appraisement, and sale of said town sites, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be reimbursable out of the funds arising from the sale of said lands: Provided, That the persons employed or detailed under this appropriation shall be allowed therefrom while on duty a per diem in lieu of subsistence at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 per day each, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I feel that an explanation of the amendment is due the Senate somewhat lengthy. In the nature of things, at this late hour in the pendency of the bill, Senators can not be expected to read the amendment and inquire into it, and this consideration causes me to do it.

A bill passed the House, known as H. R. 8461, and subsequently passed the Senate, relating to the subject-matter embraced in this amendment. That bill was amended in the Senate and a conference called for.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The subject-matter of the amendment was considered in the Senator's committee in the bill which came from the House and was afterwards reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. It was considered in the committee of my colleague, the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am not a member of that committee. It was regularly considered. The bill, however, as it passed the House and the Senate is not identical with the amendment I have offered. The amendment I offer is the bill as finally perpared by the conferees after consultation with the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator will see that this is embodying in an appropriation bill a whole statute with many sections. I do not think it ought to be done unless some committee has given it thorough examination and approves of it as a result of the investigation.

Mr. CARTER. This amendment has been approved by the committee of the other body, likewise by a committee of the Senate, and the bureaus having to deal with the subject-matter. I will briefly state to the Senator the purpose to be subserved by the amendment.

In 1904 an act was passed opening the Flathead Indian Reservation to settlement. By the terms of that act no provision whatever was made for laying out town sites. It has become obvious to the Department that the Indians should be given the benefit of the sale of town lots within the area to be opened. That will add very materially to the amount they are to receive for the lands. The bill passed by the House and subsequently by the Senate contemplated the accomplishment of this beneficent purpose. The bill further provided, in conformity with the wishes of the Indians, that a hot springs or a series of hot springs, which have been visited by these Indians from time immemorial, should be set apart as a public reservation for their use in the future, to be subject to the control of the Secretary of the Interior. That was overlooked in the original bill, as was the town-site feature covered by this amendment. It will add greatly to the revenue to be derived by the Indians from the sale of their lands and will secure to them in perpetuity the hot springs reservation, embracing, I believe, 160 acres.

The difficulty with the bill in conference rests in this, to wit, that a mistake was discovered in the title of the bill, a mistake manifestly due to a misprint. If it were not for this mistake the conferees on the part of the Senate and the House would to-day report an agreement upon the amendment I have suggested, and the bill would be passed as a separate and independent proposition. But in printing the title of the original bill, which is now in conference, the word "chapter" was unfortunately used in referring to the Revised Statutes rather than the word "section." This requires an amendment to the title, which renders the bill emanating from the conference committee with an amendment of the title subject to a point of order in the House. The conferees, realizing this parliamentary difficulty, unanimously requested that the bill upon which they had agreed, which had in substance passed both Houses, should be presented as an amendment to this appropriation bill, and the amendment is offered only for the purpose of overcoming a parliamentary difficulty relating to a subject-matter on which all are agreed, on which the conference stands in agreement, and to which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Commissioner of the General Land Office likewise agree.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt the Senator stated it, but I did not catch it. Why was not the conference report adopted?

Mr. CARTER. The conference report was arranged, all the conferees agreeing to it, both on the part of the Senate and the House. The difficulty rested in the necessity of amending the title to the bill, which would render it of necessity obnoxious to an inflexible rule of the House. It would compel the conferees to bring back one bill to that body when they had received another. That is the difficulty in which they find themselves. I think the amendment is a beneficent and proper one. All the parties agreed that it should be adopted, and I trust it will be.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. I offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, after line 24, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting the following:

That the following-described area in the Indian Territory shall constitute a new recording district, which shall be known as recording district No. 32: Beginning where the west line of range 17, east of the Indian meridian, intersects the north bank of Red River; thence north to the south line of township 5 south; thence west to the west line of range 16 east; thence north to the south line of township 4 south; thence west to the west line of range 15 east; thence north to the south line of township 3 south; thence west to the west line of range 12 east; thence south to the north bank of Red River; thence easterly along said north bank to the point of beginning; and terms of the district court of the central judicial district of said Indian Territory and a commissioners' court shall hereafter be held at the town of Boswell, and all laws applicable to and regulating the courts of the Indian Territory shall be applicable to the courts hereby created.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, is this simply another new recording district in the Indian Territory?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. KEAN. I understand that there are nine already now in this bill, which have been put on here, and I do not know where it is going to end.

Mr. CLAPP. Everyone concedes, I think, that these districts should be materially reduced. We desire that the matter shall go into conference, where we may have a better opportunity to consider the propriety of their establishment with reference to the needs of the entire Territory. It seems to me the matter of reducing these districts down to a reasonable number requires some attention.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that I hope before Congress adjourns we are going to admit Oklahoma and the Indian Territory to statehood.

Mr. CLAPP. I hope so, too.

Mr. KEAN. And I do not want to divide up all the political plums here, and not leave a few for the people of the Indian Territory and the State of Oklahoma to themselves divide.

Mr. WARNER. This will not interfere with the new States which are to come in at this session of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment which was passed over, on page 7, will be stated.

Mr. CLAPP. Before that is taken up I wish to inquire of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] whether another amendment should not come in there?

Mr. WARNER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has another amendment to offer.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I desire the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I should like to complete the individual amendments before we take up the amendments of the committee which were passed over.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in with the other court amendments. I have no personal knowledge of the necessity for this amendment; but it has been handed to me, and I offer it so that it may go into the bill now, and the subject can be considered in the conference committee, who will be able to determine what is the proper thing to be done in relation to court matters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Where the other court provisions are inserted in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

That, in addition to the places now provided by law for holding courts in the Indian Territory, terms of court shall hereafter be held at Madill; and the judge of the judicial district in which said Madill is situated shall, until further provision of law, prescribe the area and number of the district and the times and number of terms of court to be held at said Madill.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Colorado will find a place in the bill for his amendment, so that we may know where it is to come in. I understood from the reading at the Secretary's desk that there was no place in the bill designated for the amendment, and I think there ought to be such a designation.

Mr. TELLER. I asked that the amendment be inserted in connection with the other court provisions.

Mr. ALLISON. Have other provisions been inserted in the bill in regard to courts?

Mr. TELLER. Yes. I will say that I have no personal knowledge of the amendment. It was simply handed to me by people who, I think, know something about it, and who have asked that it be inserted in the bill.

There is a good deal of difference of opinion as to where these courts ought to be held. I thought when we should get them before the conference committee, the committee would probably be able to select and retain such of them as ought to be in the bill and eliminate the others. It is utterly impossible for us to do that here in the Senate. For that reason I offered the amendment. I should like to have it come in on page 48, after the word "established," at the end of line 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee, which has been read, to come in on page 48, in line 3.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Turning to page 53, I move to strike out all the amendment of the committee beginning in line 19 and going down to and including line 13, on page 54, and then to insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which has been passed over, from line 19, on page 53, to line 13, on page 54, it is proposed to insert:

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and adjudicate the claims against the Choctaw Nation of the heirs of Peter P. Pitchlynn, deceased, and to render judgment thereon in such amounts as may appear to be equitably due. Said judgments, if any, in favor of the heirs of Pitchlynn shall be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation; said judgment to be rendered on the principle of quantum meruit for services rendered and expenses incurred. Notice of said suit shall be served on the governor of the Choctaw Nation, and the Attorney-General of the United States shall appear and defend in said suit on behalf of said nation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the part stricken out deals with three different claims. I desire to eliminate two of those claims from this bill, because it seems that those two claims are to be contested. I do not believe at this time that we want to go into any controversy about them. The Pitchlynn claim is an old claim which has been repeatedly before Congress. The others seem to be comparatively new. I do not know anything about them, but I do know something about the Pitchlynn claim. I think it is a valid claim which the Pitchlynn heirs have, and they ought to be permitted to go into court; but as to the others I have no personal knowledge whatever. For that reason, rather than to have a controversy over the matter, I thought it better to eliminate the other two claims from the amendment reported by the committee, and let them go over until another session, when the matter can be presented more in detail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

Amend the act approved April 27, 1906, "to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," by striking out the following words in section 9:

"The disbursements, in the sum of $186,000, to and on account of the loyal Seminole Indians, by James E. Jenkins, special agent appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and by A. J. Brown as administrator de bonis non, under an act of Congress approved May 31, 1900, appropriating said sum, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed: Provided, That this shall not prevent any individual from bringing suit in his own behalf to recover any sum really due him."

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not understand whether the amendment of the Senator proposes to strike out something already in the bill or merely to insert what has been read.

Mr. TILLMAN. It strikes out a provision in the bill which was approved yesterday and which passed the Senate about two weeks ago, in relation to suspension of suits, forbidding suits against Brown and Jenkins. The Senator from North Dakota will recall that there was considerable debate here, almost running a whole afternoon, on that controversy.

Mr. McCUMBER. I recall the occasion.

Mr. TILLMAN. I find that the bill to which I refer, although it only became a law yesterday, is already being amended on this appropriation bill, and I thought I would try to have it amended by striking out this provision, to which I objected when the bill was in conference.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is about the Brown business. I am proposing to amend the bill which we passed here about two weeks ago, and which was approved yesterday, in reference to the Five Civilized Tribes, by striking out of that bill, which is now a law, the provision validating the acts of Brown and Jenkins. That is all.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from South Carolina be kind enough to explain the object of his amendment?

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought the Senator was fully aware of the nature of the case, because he debated it here and he objected, as well as I did, to the action of the Senate in undertaking to stop these lawsuits.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought that was stricken out.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; the Senate did not strike it out, because we did not get hold of it before it got into conference, and then we were blocked by the parliamentary situation. The House conferees insisted on the Senate amendment, and, therefore, it remained in the bill; but as we are already amending that bill, which has now become a law, I thought I would propose to amend it further by striking that out of it. That is the purpose of my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to offer an amendment on page 7, by striking out from line 19, down to and including the word "Provided," in line 2, on page 8. I wish to move to disagree to that portion of the amendment of the committee. I ask the Secretary to read the portion which I propose to strike out.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, in the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was passed over, it is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 19, the following:

That when the land of deceased allottees has been sold under existing laws, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to immediately cause to be paid to the heirs of said deceased allottees any and all moneys on deposit due said heirs from the sale of said land of said deceased persons, and that he be further directed to cause to be paid immediately upon collection, all moneys due Indian allottees or their heirs as the proceeds of leases upon individual allotments: Provided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to that portion of the amendment of the committee which has been read. Without objection, it will be regarded as disagreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the other morning, on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, we reconsidered the votes by which those two committee amendments were agreed, and now they are both open.

Mr. McCUMBER. I only wish to strike out a portion of the committee amendment. If it is passed over, I do not care to make any remarks on it, but if the Senator wishes an explanation of my amendment I can give it.

Mr. CLAPP. I certainly do, because I am opposed to the motion to strike out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the amendment of the Senator was to strike out the entire committee amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Only a portion of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CLAPP. That amendment is objected to.

Mr. SPOONER. What amendment is that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Striking out on page 7, beginning with line 19, all of the committee amendment down to and including the word "Provided," in line 2, on page 8.

Mr. CLAPP. I would ask the Senator from North Dakota if we can not pass this amendment over for a few moments until we complete the amendments which will not give rise to any debate, because that proposition and the one preceding it will be the subject of some debate?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think that probably the portion of the committee amendment I move to strike out will give rise to any great debate. I will detain the Senate only for a short time. I merely wish to explain why I have moved to strike out those particular words.

Mr. President, the law as it now exists provides for the sale of inherited lands of deceased allottees. Under the provision for the sale of such lands the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe such rules as he may deem for the best interest of the heirs or owners not only in reference to the sale, but also in reference, as I understand, to the moneys received from that sale.

Under the present ruling the money which is paid for the sale of the land is required to be deposited in some local bank, and, instead of paying the same out to the heir immediately, many of the heirs being minors, the Secretary of the Interior requires that the heir shall not draw more than $10 a month. So the money is in the bank subject to the check of the persons for whose benefit it is deposited not to exceed the sum of $10 per month.

There are two classes of persons who are at these reservations, or near them, who are extremely interested in the Indian and in the funds. The local banks that desire to retain these funds and to use them are necessarily interested in the retention of the funds, although the letters which I have from the banks indicate that their solicitude is entirely for the Indians. I have letters also from the traders, who are equally solicitous for the welfare of the Indians and the minors, complaining bitterly of this ruling. So we have the two friends of the Indian there looking after his interests, one of them insisting that the money should remain in the bank for the benefit of the Indian, so that he may receive it gradually and not all at one time; the other insisting that it should be paid to the Indian immediately in bulk, so that the Indian can go to the traders and get rid of it in bulk, and not require a year or several years to make the transfer.

As between these two friends of the Indians, the question is which one, if either, we had better favor. Following my usual method in trying to protect the Indian, I have always insisted that the longer you can keep the funds from the Indian the better it is for him. Therefore, while without question the trader or some one else will get the money just as soon as the Indian gets hold of it, I think it will be probably better for the Indian, although I am willing to admit it will also be better for the bank, that he be not allowed to take this money all at one time and get rid of it all at one time.

I have read over the report upon this subject. It appears from the report that a claim is made that the Indian does nothing but wait until the next pay day the following month before he will go to work, waiting for this $10 to come to him. On the other hand, if he gets his money all in bulk, he will be waiting then until the next pay day from the Government to support the Indian. It seems to me that the excuse that is made for this would not appeal to the judgment of the ordinary individual. I can see no real benefit in it. I can not agree entirely with the statement that is made in the report, which will be found on page 6 of Report No. 2561. Here is an explanation that to me does not explain. It is stated:

In many cases the heirs are minors—

That is true, probably, in most cases—and the deeds have been executed by guardians appointed in the probate courts where the land is located. Bonds have been given, and the courts are now calling upon the guardian for report and settlement. The guardian is unable to report other than the fact of the sale and the amount for which it sold. He has not the money, and yet is liable for it on his bond.

I can hardly understand how the guardian can become liable on his bond for property which has never come into his possession. If the Department has a right to sell these lands and has a right to determine what shall be done with the funds, the funds, being under the superior guardianship of the Department, certainly are not subject to the local law of guardianship of the county wherein those lands are situated.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly I yield to an interruption and an explanation.

Mr. CLAPP. On the Senator's statement there could be but one answer to his question; but the difficulty is that back of all this lies a law, which, as to all past allotments, provides that the heirs shall take their estates under the law of the State or Territory in which the allotment is situated.

Mr. McCUMBER. And subject to their laws?

Mr. CLAPP. And subject to their laws. There is one class of individuals that the Senator has omitted in this gathering and aggregation of the interested parties, and that is the attorneys in the localities. Already three suits are pending, one either in the Senator's State or in South Dakota—I forget which—one in Wisconsin, and one in Minnesota, to compel the payment of this money under that law. I undertake to say that in those suits, in my judgment, a mistake has been made in the party defendant. When they get the right party defendant they will recover the money.

We have passed a bill—I think it was day before yesterday—to cure that, so far as we can legally cure it, by providing that in future allotments not only the allottee will not become a citizen until he gets his final patent, but if he dies in the interim the allotment, instead of vesting under the State law in the heirs, revests in the Government, to be distributed by the Government to the heirs.

There is no question of the legality, although I doubt the wisdom somewhat of that provision. But as to these past allotments, they were made under a law in accordance with the provisions of which the heirs take under the State law. I do not believe that it is within the power of Congress to interfere with their estates, and, without meaning any reflection on the Department, but speaking purely from the standpoint of a legal proposition, I do not believe the Department has any more control over the funds derived from the sale of the lands of deceased allottees than it would have over the property of the children of the Senator in case he should pass away.

There is no use in talking. We can have all the sentiment we want in this matter; but in years gone by we passed legislation that fixed certain rights, and to undertake to take those rights away under the plea of friendship for the Indian would simply entail upon the Indian the expense of additional legislation.

In this very bill we have stricken out in clause after clause one word that will cost hundreds of allottees from one to five hundred dollars each, and all in the name of the Indians. That is where we have stricken out the word "corrected," where we undertake to remove restrictions as to individual allottees. Every one of those individual allottees will be made to believe by some attorney that he has influence and ability, and that it is only through his influence and his ability that the allottee can get those restrictions removed; and the Indian will have to pay a fee of from one to five hundred dollars. The amendment was made from the best motive probably, and I would not question the motive of the Senator who offered that amendment.

Mr. TELLER. And they will get the restrictions removed, too.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; they will get them removed.

Mr. TELLER. And the Indian will pay for it.

Mr. CLAPP. And the Indian will pay for it.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not a question of the removal of restrictions,

Mr. CLAPP. No; but it is a question of interfering with property which we placed in the control of the State.

Under existing law the allottee becomes a citizen of the United States when he takes his allotment as absolutely as any member of this Senate, save and except that, as to the land which is distributed to him, the Government retains a restriction against alienation. That may be good and it may not be, but, independent of that one limitation, the Indian takes his property absolutely and his heirs take their property under the State law.

So far as I am concerned, I would not give a fig one way or the other whether that language remains in the bill or not. If it is striken out it can not effect their rights, but if it remains there it may enable the heirs to have the money paid them under the law, instead of having to squander what little they have as heirs in paying for legal services and fees for attorneys.

I know, Mr. President, that sentiment is invoked in this matter. I know that it is not perhaps a desirable thing to state these facts as they are; but why should we allow our sentiment for the Indians—a misguided sentiment, so far as the solution of legal problems that have arisen in regard to proper legislation is concerned—to cause us to impose upon those people an unnecessary burden and expense?

Mr. McCUMBER. According to the position of the Senator, the ruling of the Department requiring this money to be placed on deposit and to be paid out $10 per month only is absolutely illegal and erroneous, and no one is bound to follow it.

Mr. CLAPP. No——

Mr. McCUMBER. If that is true, if it has no binding effect whatever, then why should we by a special law declare that the Secretary of the Interior shall have no power to have the funds kept in the banks, and provide otherwise? In other words, if the matter is under the control absolutely of the State law, then there should be no Government law attempting to interfere.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, this provision does not interfere, and that is why I say I do not care whether it is left in the bill or taken out, so far as I am concerned. It amounts to this: That instead of the Indian heir being told by the attorney and by the Indian agent, "You can not get your money without a lawsuit," he will be able to get it. They are watching these things; they will know of the passage of this law; and with this law staring the Department in the face we will cease to hold the authority over this money that, in my humble judgment, and I believe in the judgment of the Senator from North Dakota, they have no right to hold. The suits are pending now. More suits will be brought. It is true in one or two suits the plaintiff failed, because he made the wrong party defendant, but they will get the right defendant in time, and when they do they will get this money.

Now, why cloud the title to this money by an attempted restriction that confessedly we can not impose? If it were possible to-day to go back to the legislation, I think, of 1887, and change that legislation I would not combat it seriously, although I would doubt the wisdom of it, perhaps. But we can not do that. That is gone. Why should we embarrass the title to this property by a legislative declaration, which has no effect on earth except to make the heir part with some of his money in attorneys' fees in order to get what is due him?

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us apply this case. The law which is attempted to be inserted here is:

That when the land of deceased allottees has been sold under existing laws, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to immediately cause to be paid to the heirs of said deceased allottees any and all moneys on deposit due said heirs from the sale of said land of said deceased persons.

The present rule is to deposit it in the local bank to the credit of the Indian to whom it belongs. The money therefore is the money of the individual Indian, subject to his check.

Mr. CLAPP. Not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. How is that?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator is mistaken about that. It is deposited in some way. These Indians have attorneys in the first instance. That could not be done. But in some way, when the sale is made, the money is deposited in bank, subject to the check of the guardian, to be countersigned——

Mr. McCUMBER. Guardian, where there is a minor, of course.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. The check has to be countersigned by the agent. That is the situation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. Suppose we are dealing either with minors or with those who are not minors. The money is deposited in the local bank. There is where it is deposited under the present law. We will take the case at Sisseton, in South Dakota. It is deposited, say, at a bank in Sisseton, or a bank at Browns Valley. It is subject to be paid, under the present rules, at a certain amount per month and not above that. That money belongs to the claimant, and if that is true, instead of being placed under the necessity of hiring attorneys in every individual case, one case in that county in the State of South Dakota against the bank to gain possession of the whole sum at one time would determine all those cases.

If it is true that the Department has ceased all control of the Indian and over that property which he has inherited from the ancestor by reason of the allotment to the ancestor, it may be determined in that case—but I am very doubtful indeed if it will be determined, if we take into consideration the case of The United States v. Rickert—that the Department has entirely lost control over that Indian and his property by reason of declaring him to be a citizen of the United States and subject to all of the laws of the State or Territory in which he resides. That case originated from that identical point.

Under the law of 1887 it was declared that any allottee should from the date of the allotment become a citizen of the United States and subject to the protection of the laws of the State and subject to the jurisdiction of the laws of the State in which he resided. That was in 1887. The case of The United States v. Rickert was not decided until 1902. The county of Roberts, in South Dakota, sought to levy a tax upon the personal property as well as the real property and the improvements of an Indian allottee.

Mr. CLAPP. What was the personal property?

Mr. McCUMBER. The personal property consisted or horses, cattle, etc.

Mr. CLAPP. That the Government had given the Indians, and the court says it was put there by the Government for a purpose. That is why it could not be taxed.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I have read that case——

Mr. CLAPP. Horses and cattle that the Government had bought for the Indian to develop the Indian.

Mr. McCUMBER. That does not reach the subject at all. If the Government gives me a horse or a cow, I being a citizen of the United States and subject to the laws of the State, the State can tax that horse and that cow no matter where the property comes from. The question is as to the character of citizenship, and if the Indian is a full-fledged citizen and fully under the law of the State wherein he resides and his property is subject to that law, then neither the United States nor any other authority can prevent the levying of a tax upon that property. The very fact that they do hold that the Government has given this property to the Indian for his protection and to secure such enlightenment on his part that he may fulfill the duties of citizenship, declaring it absolutely, and following that up with a declaration that they intend to protect that property during his period of tutelage, that he may become a citizen, indicates clearly that the court in deciding that case did not regard this property as subject to the laws of the State nor him fully a citizen in all respects, although the Government had lost its guardianship over him and would cease to protect him.

There is nothing in the case, as I recall, which shows that it was property that came directly from the United States. It was the personal property of the Indian. The case does not show whence it came. It might have been purchased with Government money that was given to him, but it would not be the identical property. The decision of the court was that the Government still retained an interest in the individual Indian after his allotment was given and in the property necessary for his support. It placed it upon the ground that he was in a condition of tutelage during that time, even after the Government had granted him the right to vote and the right of citizenship. Otherwise their reasoning would fall to the ground—that the Government could protect his personal property and protect any other property as against taxation by the State wherein he resided—because the Government could not do that, as the Senator must admit, if it had made a grant of property to a white man.

I admit that the Government can protect any interest it may have in that real estate. In that instance the Government's interest in the real estate was not affected in any way. All it had to do was at the end of twenty years to issue its patent in fee for that land. No tax, no tax sale, no tax title could have been superior to the Government's right in that case. So it was directly interfered with. But even if we concede that proposition, we can not reason away the other proposition, that the personal property was the property of a citizen of the United States and subject to the laws of the State in which the allottee resided, and therefore was not taxable, if the Senator's position is absolutely true. I admit that I have been unable absolutely to harmonize that case with the Heff case.

Mr. CLAPP. I dislike very much to prolong this debate, but it comes to a question that seems to me is of great importance. I am glad the Senator has rested his contention in the Rickert case upon the assumed guardianship of the Government over the Indians, for if there is one contention the Supreme Court has absolutely repudiated it is that.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is, in the Heff case.

Mr. CLAPP. In the Heff case the Rickert case was cited by the Government in its brief and urged as a reason why the Government might exercise some sort of a supervision over the Indian after he became a citizen, and the court in commenting upon that says:

> But the logic of this argument implies that the United States can never release itself from the obligation of guardianship; that so long as an individual is an Indian by descent, Congress, although it may have granted all the rights and privileges of national and therefore State citizenship, the benefits and burdens of the laws of the State, may at any time repudiate this action and reassume its guardianship, and prevent the Indian from enjoying the benefit of the laws of the State, and release him from obligations of obedience thereto. Can it be that because one has Indian, and only Indian, blood in his veins he is to be forever one of a special class over whom the General Government may in its discretion assume the rights of guardianship which it has once abandoned, and this whether the State or the individual himself consents? We think the reach to which this argument goes demonstrates that it is unsound.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is a case involving simply political rights?

Mr. CLAPP. Simply political rights, but in this case the Rickert case was urged as authority for the proposition that the Government in some way still has some guardianship over these Indians.

Mr. McCUMBER. And did not the court differentiate as between the political rights and the property rights of the Indian?

Mr. CLAPP. In this respect: In the Heff case the court said that there is a difference between those political rights which have come under this law and those cases where the Government, in granting land to an Indian, reserved a limitation upon the right of alienation. In the cases involved in this act there is no such principle. These allottees became citizens. Their heirs became entitled to all their rights under the State law, and to attempt now to repeal that is simply to impose upon them the burden and expense of useless litigation.

Mr. TELLER. Which you can not do.

Mr. CLAPP. Which you can not do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not attempting to repeal anything. I leave the law as it stands.

Mr. CLAPP. I shall not discuss it any further.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that is the law, under the act of 1887, then this provision seems to me absolutely unnecessary. If it is not the law, if there is any question about it, this leaves the Department still in control of the funds.

Mr. SPOONER obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. I rise to a parliamentary question. Has the point of order been made upon the amendment, that it is general legislation?

Mr. SPOONER. I was about to make it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No point of order has been interposed.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Wisconsin rose for that purpose.

Mr. SPOONER (to Mr. HALE). Go on.

Mr. HALE. If I may be allowed to make a suggestion to the Senator in charge of the bill, he will never get his appropriation bill through unless he makes points of order where general legislation is involved. I do not know so much about the subject as does the Senator in charge, nor the Senator from Wisconsin; but to bring matters to a head, I was about to raise the point of order that it is general legislation. I have no doubt it is. I did not know but that the point had already been made.

Mr. CLAPP. No; it has not been.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have no question that three-quarters of all the legislation in the last fifteen years on Indian questions has been upon appropriation bills. While that may not be a reason, there is some reason why Senators who do not have anything to do with those questions and are not bothered with them might at least, I think, leave some of these things to those who are charged with that special duty.

There is no pleasure in serving on the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is the most disagreeable of all committee service in the Senate. It is the most difficult and troublesome and unsatisfactory of all duties that I have ever had put upon me. Somebody must do this work. The committee has been in session, I will venture to say, more than any other committee in the Senate during this session, coming here frequently at half past 9 o'clock in the morning and staying here until the Senate convenes, and then retiring for a meeting when we had an opportunity so to do. We have had before us the Commissioner, we have had the Secretary, we have had witnesses; and the committee have been trying to meet the present condition, which is different from any other condition that has ever existed in this country touching these people. We have been compelled to do some things that we would like not to have done, and yet we have been compelled to do them by an overpowering sense of necessity.

I think myself it is a bad plan, as a rule, to legislate upon an appropriation bill, and yet when we come to make provisions, as we have been doing in this bill, for the closing up of conditions existing between the Government and these people for the last forty or fifty years, it is utterly impossible for us to do it unless we do in some instances in settling these matters transcend the rule that no general legislation shall be put upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. President, this very question now presented may seem to Senators to be a matter of not very much importance. It is of vital importance. In the first place, in my judgment, the Department, without any authority of law whatever, have seized upon the moneys belonging to these Indians, who are to-day citizens of the United States; and they may be, and doubtless are, as incapable as it is said they are. But at no time in the history of this country has any man been heard here or anywhere else to assert that, because a citizen of the United States was incapable of discharging his duties to himself and his family as he ought to do, the Government of the United States had the right to become his guardian.

The Department, without any authority of law in my opinion, has put its hand upon the property of these men and has been paying them, under certain conditions, $10 a month. You could not conceive of any plan that would quicker make a pauper of an Indian, or a white man either for that matter, than to have somebody doling out to him per month $10, just enough out of his money to keep him alive; not enough to enable him to engage in business; not enough to enable him to become self-supporting; withholding from him that which belongs to him by law and by custom in this country.

It may be, Mr. President, that the amendment violates the rule, and it may be that the occasion does not justify it, but in my opinion if it ever was justified it is justified in this particular case and in half a dozen other cases where we have already transcended the rule ex necessitate, as a matter of duty.

Mr. President, I heard read here the other day a letter touching some question arising in Wisconsin. It was said that if the money that was to be paid out by a provision that had been inserted in the bill was paid out, those people would become paupers. I have not the slightest doubt that some of them would, but that is no reason why they should not be paid if they have ceased to be the wards of this nation. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] seems to think that the Indian is still a ward of the nation, although he is a citizen.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want to say more than that the case I have mentioned raises a question of doubt on that subject.

Mr. TELLER. It does not raise any question of doubt.

There can not be any question of doubt, upon principle; and if there were no decision whatever, there could be no question that this Government possesses no police power whatever in this matter. This Government has no right to act as a guardian for anybody except the Indian, when he is an Indian, not racially, but an Indian under the law.

The Heff case is as square and positive an enunciation of the doctrine for which I am contending as it is possible for the English language to make it, the decision being rendered by one of the clearest-headed men on the bench, and, I believe, without dissent.

Mr. President, I sympathize with every effort to help those who are down. I have learned—what I think we have all learned by observation, by experience, by history—that after all the way to make men men is to compel them to discharge the duties of manhood, to take them out of leading strings, to put them upon their own mettle, as the saying is. If these Indians will waste their substance, let them waste it, and when they have wasted it and when they do not get $10 a month doled out to them, when no charity is given to them, they will go to work and they will cease to be paupers and vagabonds.

Mr. President, I believe that the provision we have put in here is a proper one. I understand there is a large amount of this money. I have seen the statement made by a man who claims to know that all told in the United States there are nearly $2,000,000 held in this way. That may be an exaggeration; I do not know. Some of it will be wasted; all of it will not be wasted, and there is no principle which would justify us here in maintaining any control over it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the point of order raised by the Senator from Maine go to all of the committee amendment beginning with line 19, page 7, and ending with line 10, on page 8?

Mr. HALE. It extends as far as the proviso.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand it includes that which I asked to have stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order, as the amendment clearly proposes general legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. To what part of this language does the ruling of the Chair apply—the whole of it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To that part which was challenged by the point of order.

Mr. SPOONER. The whole of it. I raise the same point of order against the portion of the amendment at the top of page 7, extending down to line 19.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 14, line 23, I move to insert "$290,000." I think it was fixed this morning at $260,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "ninety."

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to have the amendment now read as it will read if amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as proposed to be amended will be read by the Secretary.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Telegraphing, telephoning, and purchase of Indian supplies: To pay the expense of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian service, including inspection and pay of necessary employees; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, and all other expenses connected therewith, and for telegraphing and telephoning, and for transportation of Indian goods and supplies, including pay and expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, $290,000; and warehouses for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service shall be maintained at the following places: New York, Chicago, Omaha, St. Louis, and San Francisco.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will say that the portion of the amendment of the committee on page 8 is agreed to. That was passed over.

Mr. LODGE. What remains after the word "Provided?"

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What remains after the part excluded by the objection.

Mr. CLAPP. Is that subject to a point of order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No point of order has been made against it. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] has an amendment to offer, and also the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to line 7 on page 44, where a blank is to be filled by inserting the words "April 26." Without objection, that amendment will be agreed to. Two amendments were added on the same page, one by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], which reads "April 27." That should be changed to "April 26."

Mr. CLAPP. That is right; it should be "April 26."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is agreed to. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] also offered an amendment in which the same words, "April 26," should be inserted. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the junior Senator from Wisconsin has an amendment that he desires to offer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to offer an amendment to come in after line 21, page 162.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment already adopted, line 21, on page 162, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit the business committee of the Menominee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin to cause to be cut into logs and hauled to suitable places for sawing and cause to be scaled, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the dead and down timber on the sections containing dead and down timber in the north half of township No. 29, range 13 east; the north half of township No. 29, range No. 14 east, and in the south half of township No. 30, range No. 13 east, on the Menominee Indian Reservation, in Wisconsin, as herein provided, such cutting of timber to be in addition to the amount authorized to be cut and sold annually by the act of June 12, 1890. (26 Stat. L., p. 146.)

The Secretary of the Interior shall make contracts with a sufficient number of portable mill owners to come upon the reservation and saw into lumber the logs so cut from such dead and down timber, the compensation for such sawing to be fixed at a certain rate per thousand feet, which amount shall not exceed the sum of $3.50 per thousand feet board measure, both hard and soft wood included.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay out of the funds of the said Menominee tribe of Indians now on deposit in the United States Treasury all necessary expenses incurred in the cutting and sawing of the timber as provided herein, which amount of money shall be reimbursed from the sale of the lumber as herein provided.

That said lumber shall be sold in such quantities as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to the highest and best bidder for cash, after due advertisement inviting proposals, and in such manner and at such time and place as the Secretary may direct, and from the proceeds of the sales of such lumber there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Menominee tribe of Indians the amount of money paid out of said fund as the expense of cutting and sawing said lumber; and also there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians the one-fifth part of the net proceeds of the sales of said lumber, to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of said Indians, and the residue of said proceeds shall be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of said tribe and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum to be paid to the said tribe per capita in semi-annual cash payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause, at as early date as practicable, an examination to be made of lands that have been or may be allotted to members of the Five Civilized Tribes, with a view to determining the lands which may, in his judgment, be reasonably classified as mineral lands because of supposed deposits therein of coal, asphalt, oil, gas, or other minerals of commercial value; and to the extent that the President may approve such classification, he shall give notice thereof, by proclamation, that such lands have been so classified; and the President may, from time to time, eliminate therefrom, by like proclamation, such lands as may be shown to his satisfaction to be in fact nonmineral; but nothing herein contained shall affect the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, under other laws, to remove restrictions upon alienation of the lands so proclaimed to be mineral in character; nor shall anything in this provision contained be held or construed to discontinue or in any respect affect the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior relative to any mineral lease or mineral leases heretofore executed by any allottee of said tribes.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to make the classification of said lands there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

All restrictions on the alienation of lands which have been or hereafter may be allotted to Indian allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes are hereby removed, except as to full bloods, minors, homesteads, and as to lands aforesaid classified as mineral lands, until the right to alienate such lands accrues under existing laws: Provided, That no agricultural leases for a term exceeding one year nor any mineral lease of lands from which the restrictions are not removed shall be valid unless approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be subject to such regulations as he may prescribe; and no lands from which the restrictions are not removed by law shall be alienated or encumbered without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The removal of the restrictions hereinbefore provided for shall take effect at the earliest time practicable, to be determined by the President, who shall give at least thirty days' notice thereof by proclamation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I do not propose to object to this amendment, because I realize that objections along this line are absolutely futile. But I do want to put upon record my dissent from the prevailing view that the people of the Indian Territory should be further and continually bothered and hampered both in their progress and prosperity by throwing around them restriction after restriction upon their power to do business. I wish to put upon record my dissent from the idea that the people of the Indian Territory (and when I say the people of the Indian Territory I mean those classified as members of the Five Civilized Tribes) are not competent to transact their own business. I want to put upon record my disclaimer of this policy which every year is holding back the progress of that people, taking thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars away from their property values.

Mr. President, the amendment had its inception in an idea that something should be done to alleviate the situation. We all know that all the property substantially down there is hampered and bound up by Congressional restrictions as to its alienation. The amendment, I say, had its inception in an idea that those restrictions shall be liberalized, and it comes before the Senate still further restricted.

As I said, I am not going to make any opposition to the amendment; but I wish to call attention to two matters—I wish I had them before me—showing the condition of affairs in the Indian Territory and what misapprehension exists not only in the whole country, but in this Chamber. I would be glad if I had with me an interview by Mr. Clarence Douglas, the editor of the leading daily paper of the Indian Territory, given to the Post of this city, I think, some three or four weeks ago, upon the proposition of the ability of the people of the Five Civilized Tribes to transact their own business.

I have here, however, a statement by a Cherokee by blood, which sufficiently speaks for itself. I will state that this gentleman was before the Committee on Indian Affairs protesting in the strongest terms against the injustice that men fully competent to transact their own business, men of collegiate education, men of business education, should not be allowed to sell or to have to do with one foot of their land without first consent having been had and obtained. This gentleman when before the Committee on Indian Affairs was asked, "Why do you object to this? You certainly can have your restrictions removed by the Secretary of the Interior." He said: "Gentlemen, I object for the same reason that you would object. I would not for all the property I possess there subject my American citizenship to the humiliation of having to say to a clerk of the Dawes Commission or of the Interior Department, 'I want these restrictions removed,' and be subject to his cross-examination as to whether I am capable of carrying on my own business, as to whether I can read or write, as to how many debts I owe, as to what I intend to do with the money if I sell this property." This gentleman makes the following statement, which I ask to have read from the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Robert L. Owen, of Indian Territory, who made the leading argument in the Supreme Court for the Eastern Cherokees in their $5,000,000 claim, is at the Riggs House.

"The Indian Territory," said Mr. Owen, "is making great progress. The allotments are almost completed, and a great immigration is going on. The citizen Indian is hardly distinguishable from any other citizen of the United States. He is entirely different from the Indians of other States, being educated, cultivated, refined, and self-supporting. Over half of them are so nearly white that their Indian blood would not be recognized. Only a fourth of the Indian people are of full Indian blood, and they have had the advantages of schools and churches and self-government for seventy-five years. The idea that they are generally incompetent is absurd. They do not differ materially from a like number of people in the agricultural districts of southern Kansas or Texas.

"Of course, we have our average proportion of deaf, dumb, blind, insane, and incompetents, but the mere name 'Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee' at a distance of 1,500 miles has established the idea of general incompetency, and the Government, with great benevolence, insisted, against the wishes of our people, in legislating on this unsound theory. The law, therefore, imposed the condition that the surplus land of our people should not be alienable for five years from the date of the patent. This does not prevent sales; it merely diminishes the selling price. Where a clear legal fee would bring $15 an acre, the equitable estate will only bring half as much, and the law, instead of protecting our people, ties their hands while their pockets are picked.

"They own the equitable estate in their several allotments, and when they sell this equity, while the bare legal fee does not pass for five years, the equitable estate does pass, and nine out of ten will, by proper deed, make good the legal title when the 'restrictions' are removed.

"The so-called 'restrictions' are well meant, but are only injurious. This will never be understood at long range, and our people will be kept benevolently bound by their friends, strangely enough, for the benefit of unscrupulous speculators."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. TILLMAN. If there is no Senator ready to go on with a speech, I will ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Now, Mr. President, the utterance read from the desk is the utterance of a man whom the Congress of the United States, in its wisdom, says shall not dispose of an acre of his land without consent first had and obtained, and this amendment says he shall not dispose of an acre of his land in any way if it contains oil, gas, or mineral. The utterance is the utterance of a man who is at present in this city engaged in the trial of a lawsuit before the Supreme Court of the United States involving $5,000,000 worth of property.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. May I interrupt the Senator to remind him that I am credibly informed one of the justices of that great court went so far as to say the argument which the gentleman made was one of the ablest presentations ever made to the court?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no question about it, Mr. President, and yet we stand here day after day and year after year and insult the intelligence of that people by throwing continually around them more and more of these humiliating conditions. I simply to-day, Mr. President, want to protest now and for the last time against that benevolent action of the American Congress which, as Mr. Owen says, binds the hands of those people so that others may pick their pockets.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator sits down I wish to say that here is a provision to which the Senator very forcibly objects. It is a clean piece of new and general legislation. If the Senator is so strongly opposed to it, why does he not make the point of order, when it would go out at once? I make this suggestion because when Senators who are not as near to the Indian question as our western friends have made points of order that provisions are general legislation some impatience has been shown because of the interposition of Senators whose special attention is not directed to these subjects.

Now, here is the instance of a Senator who is near to the whole scene of action, who expresses in strong language his opposition to the entire proposition of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Long]. I should be glad to know why it is that the Senator does not, on his responsibility as a Senator and a western man near to the Indian question and knowing about it, invoke the point of order.

Mr. President, when committees specially charged with the subject-matter have incorporated provisions into the bill that they report to the Senate or when a Senator nigh to the scene of action reports or introduces an amendment which he says and believes will be beneficent in its effect, but which is yet subject to a point of order and is general legislation, it is not an agreeable task for a Senator who is dealing simply with the business of the body to interpose, and I again ask the Senator from Wyoming why he has not made the point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator asks me at some length. I will answer him at much less length. The Senator from Wyoming does not make the point of order because the Senator from Wyoming does not consider that under the rule the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the Senate, but before this matter is disposed of I want to indorse the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Wyoming.

There is another thing that I think it is fair to protest against, and that is the continual characterization of everybody on the frontier in connection with the Indians, and especially in the Indian Territory, as grafters. It was my duty to go down there last fall and look over that Territory. I found people from all States there, reputable people, people who are laying the foundation of a great Commonwealth, people who are framing a policy there and working out the problem of Government, and in the absence of needed legislation, without power to raise one dollar of taxes for their streets and highways. They have built splendid cities of 15,000 and 20,000 people, which compare with other cities, and yet all done by subscription. We have labored this winter as best we could somewhat, in a measure, to relieve that situation. They are at least now vested with the power to assess taxes for that purpose. As I have already said this morning, in our zeal for the Indian instead of serving the Indian we have thrown around him limitations which he will break through, with the aid of judicial investigation and judicial determination, and all that it will result in will be that he will be mulcted in an additional sum out of his estate in attorney's fees.

I do not believe this policy is a fair one, either to the people or to the Indians down there. It was my privilege last fall to address in the Indian Territory an Indian school, and many of the scholars and students in that school were as fair in complexion as anyone in this Chamber, but because upon one side or the other they have inherited Indian blood they are Indians, and they must be kept subject to restrictions.

Mr. President, the history of our dealing with the American Indian is a story of wrong from start to finish; but with every other wrong that we have done the American Indian the wrong we have done him in robbing him of his self-respect overtops all the other wrongs. We assume to be the guardian of the Indian, and we have taught him almost every vice he knows. The Indian is no fool. He laughs at the white man, with all his vices, assuming to teach civilization and morals to the Indian. The Indian is not blind to the situation, and he laughs at the plea of the white man coming to deal honestly with him, and acting as guardian of his property, when our great Government stands appalled in the unlawful taking over of thousands and millions of acres of our public domain.

Is that the kind of education which will make a man of the Indian? The Indian has a sense of humiliation. I can take the brightest boy in the city of Washington, and dole out $10 a month to him until he was 35 or 40 years of age, and he would not know enough to buy the necessaries of life. That is not the way to bring about the development of the Indian.

I know too well, and every man in the West must know, that the Indian is improvident, that many of them squander their means; but I believe to-day in regard to the funds we are trying to dispose of, it would be better for the Indian if the fund could be buried in the depths of the sea.

We are confronted to-day with the problem whether we will retain that fund, and keep this pupilage of the Indian, keeping him a child, doling out $10 a month to him, so that he can accomplish nothing in the acquisition of improvements, and simply squander it as readily as he would squander the larger fund that might be given him. On the other hand, if we give it to them in bulk we all know too well that much of it will be squandered. In would be better for them if the funds did not exist. But the funds are there, and the funds belong to these people, and our action this winter on the other bill and much of our action on this bill, humane as have been our purposes, kind as have been our sentiments, and inspired by a desire to serve the Indian, have simply complicated the rights of the Indians. Subjected as he is to the other great drafts upon him, we place him now subject to the additional draft at the hands of the attorneys, who will point out to them the ineffectual legislation which we have passed in the other bill and in this bill, and in the end the burden falls upon the poor Indian. Well might the Indian exclaim, "God save me from my friends!"

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I will make the point of order against the amendment, that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I rise, sir, to ask to have stricken out of the bill from and including line 17, on page 161, down to and including line 2, on page 162.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Wisconsin that his motion is not in order, that amendment having been agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I would suggest to the Senator that he make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not know but that it had been passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator can make the motion when the bill gets into the Senate out of the Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can make the motion when the bill reaches the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I can make it at this time as well, I would prefer to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to, on pages 161 and 162? The Chair hears none. The vote is reconsidered, and the amendment is before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My reason for making that motion is that the subject-matter of the amendment which I have submitted is now under consideration by the Interior Department and is not yet determined. This provision of the bill takes it out of the hands of the Interior Department and determines it here and now by legislation; and that should not be done. I offer and ask to have read a letter from the delegate of the business committee of the Menominee Indians of Wisconsin.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know to what amendment the Senator from Wisconsin refers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 161, beginning with line 17, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 2, on page 162.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I now send to the desk and ask to have read the letter to which I have referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will, without objection, read the letter submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23, 1906.

HON. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In the Indian appropriation bill now pending before the Senate, page 161, commencing from line 17, contains the following provision:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to such members of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe as he shall find entitled thereto, under the said act of March 3, 1893, and the enrollment made thereunder, and the descendants who are living and in being on the 1st day of July, 1904, in cash, per capita, the whole of the trust fund now to their credit in the Treasury of the United States, etc."

I desire to say that the Menominee tribe of Indians have a claim against the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians, arising out of timber which was cut on the Menominee Indian Reservation by the said Stockbridge and Munsee Indians many years ago. This timber was afterwards sold for the benefit of the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians. A statement of the nature of this claim was filed in the office of the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs some time ago.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on July 3, 1905, referred this matter to the superintendent of the Green Bay Indian School, with instructions to investigate the contentions of these two tribes, and to submit a full report of his views upon the question to the Indian Office, as shown by the copy of office letter, which is attached hereto.

Some time during the past winter the business committees representing the Menominee and Stockbridge and Munsee Indians met at the agency office at Keshena, Wis., in the presence of Supt. Shepard Freeman, and a hearing was held. At this hearing the Menominees produced substantial evidence to sustain their contentions, while the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians had none save their own denial to the assertions made by the Menominees.

The witnesses in behalf of the Menominee tribe of Indians at said hearing were John Winans and J. L. Whitehouse, both white men and residents of Shawano County, Wis. Both of these men are prominent citizens in the community in which they reside and are entitled to credit as witnesses. They are old settlers of Shawano County, Wis., and they were well familiar with the facts connected with the cutting of the timber on the Menominee Indian Reservation by the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians.

After the hearing was over the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians admitted that the claim of the Menominees was a just claim. Then an agreement was made between the two tribes to the effect that as soon as the ground was dry in the spring the location of the land upon which the timber was cut should be ascertained and the timber estimated. The Stockbridge and Munsee Indians stated that after this was done they are willing to pay the indebtedness as claimed by the Menominees.

I inquired at the Indian Office the other day whether Supt. Shepard Freeman had made his report upon this subject, and I was informed that he had not as yet.

Supt. Shepard Freeman will not be able to make his report until after the timber has been estimated.

I am informed that the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians have only $75,000 to their credit in the Treasury of the United States. This provision I have quoted authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to pay the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians all this money. If this is done, our claim will not be settled.

I therefore ask that said provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians the whole of the trust fund now to their credit in the Treasury of the United States be stricken off, and the money withheld until after they have settled the claim of the Menominee tribe of Indians.

Respectfully submitted.

MITCHELL OSHKENANIEW,
Delegate of Business Committee of Menominee Indians of Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I caused inquiry to be made at the Interior Department some days ago, and I find that no report is on file at the present time from Shepard Freeman, the superintendent of the Green Bay Indian school, to whom this matter was referred for investigation. For that reason I think it fitting that this provision in the bill, which forestalls that investigation and report, shall be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee on page 161, beginning in line 17, and going down to line 2, on page 162, which the Chair understands the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] desires disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARNER. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not understand whether the question was on the motion made by my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to strike out the committee amendment, or whether the question was on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My request was that the committee amendment be stricken out.

Mr. SPOONER. That, as I understand, is a Senate amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a Senate amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. And it has been disagreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question was on the committee amendment. Shall the amendment be agreed to? By a negative vote it has been disagreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Then it is out?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is out by a vote of the Senate. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee, on page 41, after the word "records," in line 7, it is proposed to insert:

That all restrictions upon the alienation of lands of Indian allottees of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes, excepting as to homesteads, are hereby removed, to take effect July 1, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. What is that amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. WARNER.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that has been the subject of much debate in the Senate. I agree with much that was said by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I think there is a great deal in the history of the governmental dealing with the Indians which is entirely discreditable to the United States. I think a great deal of it is due to the fact that the rules of the Senate have generally been entirely ignored in the consideration of Indian appropriation bills, and they have been filled with general legislation. Subjects which ought to have been, in the interest of the Indians and in the interest of the honor of the Government of the United States, separately considered as independent propositions and debated upon their merits have been concealed in the womb, if I may say so, of these very elaborate bills. Doubtless there have been a great many cases where legislation was needed and where it could probably be best accomplished through appropriation bills. Undoubtedly there are thousands of cases in which restrictions ought to be removed. I have no doubt there are thousands of cases in which it is an injustice not to remove restrictions; but there are thousands of cases, Mr. President, in which restrictions ought not to be removed, if they lawfully exist.

An Indian does not become overnight competent to transact the business of life, competent to protect himself against rapacious white men. I am not reflecting on the race, but I take it there are almost as many white men in this country who have followed the trail of the half-breed and the full blood, not in the interest of the Indian, as there are Indians, and there always will be.

I think, Mr. President, the legislation was a great mistake which transformed by the signature of a President the Indian from his traditional position of dependence and guardianship to independence, with the responsibilities which that status carries with it. I think the time has come when general legislation in the Indian appropriation bills ought to be much more carefully guarded.

This is general legislation. I am in favor of investigation, which shall enable an intelligent discrimination in the removal or retention of restrictions upon the power of alienation; but I do not believe it is in the interest of the Indian; I do not believe it is fair play to thousands of Indians, Mr. President, that by one provision, broad as it can be made, incorporated without investigation and further intelligent debate, in an Indian appropriation bill, this change in status should be brought about; and I make the point of order, Mr. President, that the amendment offered is general legislation.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SPOONER. I will withhold the point of order.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I understand the point of order is not debatable.

Mr. SPOONER. It is debatable.

Mr. WARNER. I am not sufficiently familiar with the rules of the Senate to discuss the point of order, and therefore I shall be glad to give way to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who was about taking the floor. I may have a few words to say later in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I understand the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. SPOONER. No; it is withheld.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I care to discuss the point of order, the Chair having, as I understand, passed upon a similar point of order. I have expressed my dissent from the ruling of the Chair, and I do not know that I care to discuss it further.

But, Mr. President, I approach the subject without very much hope. I regard the condition, in the Indian Territory particularly, as an exceedingly critical and anomalous one. I do not expect that the Senate of the United States to-day is going to give very much attention to this question. If it should, it would be the first time in thirty years that the Senate would take hold of this question as the Senate ought to take hold of it.

It is nearly thirty years since I came into the Senate. This question has been a live question, and it has been left practically for half a dozen men to investigate and make themselves acquainted with the facts, and then for the Senate, unacquainted with the facts, to overrule them in their conclusions of law and conclusions of fact. If I speak with some warmth upon it, it is because we in the West have suffered immeasurably at the hands of well-intentioned members of the Senate and well-intentioned people who are outside of the Senate, who have assumed to control this question, in which we of the West are more particularly interested than anybody else.

I do not agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that the trouble has arisen out of legislation upon appropriation bills. It is only a few years since that system was adopted. While the appropriation bills remained with the general Committee on Appropriations there was very little of this; but when the Indian appropriation bill was by the Senate referred to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, it was but natural and to be expected that that committee would deal with the subject not simply in the way of a financial measure, but as a question of Indian policy and Indian necessities.

A few moments ago there was offered an amendment that was declared out of order, on the suggestion of the Senator from Misssisippi [Mr. MONEY], who, I suppose, without any consideration whatever as to what the effect of the provision would be, but simply upon the theory that general legislation should not be put upon an appropriation bill, raised a point of order against it.

An amendment was offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG], who has some knowledge of the needs and wants of the people of that country—and I am sure no one will doubt but that he is as anxious to protect the Indians as anybody could be. That amendment was not very satisfactory to me, and not very satisfactory, I think, to himself; but we believed it would be better than the present condition. That being disposed of, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] offers an amendment which is much more extensive and far-reaching in its effect than the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to get information as to why the committee did not consider the important phases of the Indian question. I may be mistaken in saying that they did not; but I ask why did they not, in the amendments which came from the committee and were incorporated in the bill suggesting to us changes in the law, deal with this important question of removing restrictions? Why is it brought in here at the twelfth hour, so to speak, in written form, without having been printed, so that we could examine it and see what its effect would be? That is the complaint of the Senate; that is my trouble. I do not know what is going on, and do not seem to be able to "catch on." I may be "clabber headed."

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I care about going into the question as to why the committee did not do so. There is a difference of opinion in the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to give my understanding of the matter to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. It is my understanding only—I may be wrong—but I understand that substantially this provision was passed by the House of Representatives in the Five Civilized Tribes bill, which has lately been before both Houses, and that this provision substantially was also passed by the Senate when that bill came up for consideration here. Other amendments to the House bill were also passed; and in the conference report, which was discussed and to which both Houses agreed, this particular part of the action of both Houses was eliminated finally from the bill; so that, as a matter of fact, it has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me further, I should like to know whether or not this sweeping amendment which is proposed now does not alter and radically change the situation produced by the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin in regard to coal lands and oil lands?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are not these allottees supposed throughout all that Territory to have some coal and oil under their lands, and is it not the purpose to give the monopolies, which have seized the coal and oil elsewhere, an opportunity to get their fingers in here?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can not speak as to what may have been the purpose of other people. I have advocated this thing very strenuously, but I will not answer the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. Let us leave out "purpose"——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It has not been my purpose, nor has it been the purpose of any member upon this floor who is advocating it so far as I know. But I want to say to the Senator further that this amendment does not touch the coal land, about which the Senator from Wisconsin spoke the other day, because that land is not allotted land, but is land segregated from allotment by the Secretary of the Interior under the direction of Congress.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will change the word "purpose" to "result" or "effect." Will not the effect of this amendment be to enable those who are seeking to monopolize the oil fields in the Indian Territory to get in under this provision and get possession of the oil? Will that not be the effect of it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If would be no more the effect of it there than it would be here. The effect of putting any land in private ownership is to consolidate that land in other ownership if the sale shall be made. That would be the effect of it no more there than elsewhere. I deprecate the idea that whenever the Government takes an action of this kind to give men their citizen's rights under the law it shall be characterized as an effort to monopolize and grab.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is no reason to suppose there will be any aggregation of land if this amendment is adopted either for the purpose of mining coal or obtaining oil or anything else that would not exist without it. The country down there is now pretty well divided up and in the hands of large corporations, and that difficulty, if it is a difficulty, exists and can not be saved, in my judgment, by any legislation that we may here enact.

I do not know that any serious trouble would arise if certain parties should become the owners of these coal lands, provided they buy them and pay the proper price for them and that the people who have them and own them get the proper price. That is one of the reasons that a number of Senators here who have given some attention to this subject favor removing these restrictions, because it would enable the owner of property to sell it in the open market without having to come to Washington to secure the consent of some subordinate in the Interior Department, for no one will pretend, of course, and we can not believe for a moment, that the Secretary of the Interior can give personal attention to and have personal knowledge of these transactions.

As has been stated, if the Indian wants to sell, he must go and get some lawyer, or somebody who says he has got influence enough, to secure a removal of the restrictions. Then the lawyer has to get an adequate fee out of it. We had a gentleman before us the other day who, without any hesitation and without any concealment, said that he had secured the removal of restrictions on quite a number of claims, and that he had charged $500 in each case. In some cases there had been much more than that charged.

The most common method, I believe it will be found, of dealing with this subject is for some man to go and say to an Indian, "You want to sell your land"—that is, land other than his homestead—"you have a right to sell it, provided you can get the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. To do that you must show that you are capable of discharging the duties of citizenship to the extent that you will know how to take care of your property after you get it." There are some people down there, Mr. President, who will not employ that class of agents, and who are as capable of dealing with the subject of their property rights as any man in the Senate. They decline to do that, and they are not allowed to sell unless they do that thing or come here and humiliate themselves before the Department.

When the contract is made it is provided that the attorney shall have $500, or whatever the fee may be, and an additional arrangement is made that the allottee shall take a certain amount for the land, which is generally less than any other person would pay. The Indian feels that he must get somebody to release him from these restrictions, and then he agrees with the party who is to secure his release that he will take a certain sum for the land. The man pays him a few dollars. Then he goes on and gets the restrictions removed and sells the land for less than it would bring if the allottee himself had a right to sell it without securing consent.

Mr. President, not only is the Indian affected, but the white man who has gone down there to live and those who expect to go there to live are involved. There are, I suppose, about 90,000 Indians inside of the Indian Territory. There are four or five times that number of white people, and perhaps even more. Those people are without land. They are anxious to buy, but unless there is somebody to sell of course they can not become landowners.

Every one of the Indians in the Indian Territory is a citizen of the United States. Whether wisely or not does not make any difference; he is a citizen. The Senator from North Dakota, as I understand him, insists that notwithstanding his citizenship the Government still has some control over him, and he cites in support of that the case of The United States v. Rickert, decided in 188 United States, October term, 1902. In that case the only question was whether the Government of the United States had such title in the property that it could not be taxed by the State. At that time these Indians were not freed from their wardship. They were still members of the tribe, and they were not citizens of the United States. The court declared that they were wards. All that was decided in this case was, in the first instance, that the Government of the United States had the ownership of the property to such an extent that the State could not tax it. As an elementary principle of law, I suppose everybody will admit that a State can not tax the land of the Government of the United States. It is true that when some of the Western States were admitted they guaranteed that they would not do that, but the Supreme Court of the United States years ago declared that without any such guaranty in the constitution of the State it had no right to tax Government property. They did that in several cases. It is not worth while to cite them.

There was another question in this case which the Senator from North Dakota cites, and that was whether personal property belonging to the Indian was taxable; and the court decided that the personal property was not taxable. It so decided on the ground that it was practically the property of the United States, and because it was the property of the United States it could not be taxed, as no property of the United States can be taxed by a State.

In 1888 the Attorney-General gave an opinion that the government of the State could not tax Indian lands held under the act of 1887. The act of 1887 provided for what is called a "patent," which the Supreme Court declared was not a patent, but merely a memorandum in writing that on a certain occasion, at a certain time, the Government would convey the title; that the title remained with the United States. A patent, in a technical sense, is a deed, but the court made the distinction between that kind of a patent and the ordinary patent issued to a citizen of the United States who becomes the owner of 160 acres of land. The court said the—> statute plainly imports nothing more than instruments or memoranda in writing, designed to show that for a period of twenty-five years the United States shall hold the land allotted in trust for the sole use and benefit of the allottee.

They also held that the buildings erected by the Indians were a part of the realty.

Now, coming to personal property—

> Was the personal property, consisting of cattle, horses, and other property of like character, which had been issued to these Indians by the United States, and which they were using upon their allotments, liable to assessments and taxation by the officers of Roberts County in 1899 and 1900?

Then the court say:

> The personal property in question was purchased with the money of the Government, and was furnished to the Indians in order to maintain them on the land allotted during the period of the trust estate, and to induce them to adopt the habits of civilized life. It was, in fact, the property of the United States, and was put into the hands of the Indians to be used in execution of the purpose of the Government in reference to them. The assessment and taxation of the personal property would necessarily have the effect to defeat that purpose.

That is all that was decided in that case—that the Government had a property interest.

Now we come to the Heff case, which is the last declaration of the court on that subject and is perfectly consistent with a dozen decisions the court has made at different times. As I have said again and again here, if there never had been any decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the subject it could not be a question of doubt among lawyers.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] read a portion of this decision; I merely wish to read a word or two.

Mr. McCUMBER. From which decision is the Senator about to read?

Mr. TELLER. From the Heff case. I guess I will read only a little on page 509, because the Senator from Minnesota read the most of it.

Referring now to this very case to which I have just called attention, the court say:

> In United States v. Rickert (188 U. S., 432), we sustained the right of the Government to protect the lands thus allotted and patented from an incumbrance of State taxation.

Then the court goes on to say:

> But it is unnecessary to pursue this discussion further. We are of the opinion that when the United States grants the privileges of citizenship to an Indian—

I wish the Senate would give attention to this decision—

> it gives to him the benefit of and requires him to be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State; it places him outside the reach of police regulations on the part of Congress; that the emancipation from Federal control thus created can not be set aside at the instance of the Government without the consent of the individual Indian and the State, and that this emancipation from Federal control is not affected by the fact that the lands it has granted to the Indian are granted subject to a condition against alienation and incumbrance, or the further fact that it guarantees to him an interest in tribal or other property.
> The district court of Kansas did not have jurisdiction of the offense charged, and therefore the petitioner is entitled to his discharge from imprisonment.

It can not be controverted that a citizen, having been an Indian, is just as much a citizen as if he had never been an Indian. We have never made any distinction as against a foreigner who came here and abjured his allegiance to a foreign government and swore allegiance to ours. His rights have been equal in all respects to the rights of any native-born citizen. We have never asserted any control over him, nor is it possible that the General Government can maintain such control.

The fact that these people down there are citizens of the United States has materially changed the condition and has made it more difficult, perhaps, to deal with. But at the same time we ought to understand that that has passed beyond any controversy; right or wrong, it must be left as it is. If these are citizens, they must be assumed to have the rights of citizenship as well as the obligations of citizenship. Of course they have taken their property with restrictions, and they must hold that property until those restrictions expire.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course that doctrine applies as much to the full bloods as to the others?

Mr. TELLER. It applies to all. There is no distinction between a full blood and a mixed blood. Of course we may maintain that they shall not sell their lands because they have taken their lands with these restrictions. It is a simple question of public policy. It is a simple question as to what will be best for the Indian and what will be best for the white man who comes in contact with him: Shall the Indian be allowed to sell or shall he not?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. It is merely for information. I understood the Senator from Colorado the other day to say, in answer, I think, to an interrogatory which I took the liberty of putting to him, that there were a good many thousand Indians who confessedly were not competent to manage with discretion their own affairs. Is it not possible to make some investigation and discriminate between the great body who are and the large but still minor body who are not competent?

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt we might make some investigation with reference to whether we will remove the restriction on full bloods.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I mean; and the others, where the restrictions exist—where they are in the patent.

Mr. TELLER. That is what we have been trying to do. That has been the vice of this legislation in the past. We have submitted that question to the Secretary of the Interior to determine. Here are 90,000 people owning land, for every Indian owns land. There are no landless Indians at the present time. Those 90,000 people have no way of determining whether they are allowed to sell their land until they come before the Secretary of the Interior and try to persuade him that they are competent to deal with this subject and ought to be allowed to sell. If we had simply said originally that they should not sell their land; that they should hold it for twenty years or twenty-five years, and had stopped there, it would undoubtedly have been better for the Indians than the present condition. But we did not do that, and we have been allowing the Indians to sell, and not always, perhaps, have those most capable of taking care of themselves been allowed to sell.

This land in the Indian Territory owned by the Indians is going to be occupied by somebody. You can not in this age prevent it from being occupied. It will be occupied according to law or it will be occupied without law. White men will go there and make some arrangement with the Indians, which may be beneficial or which may not; and I think myself the wisest thing we can do is to give, at least to the mixed bloods, the right to alienate. I do not mean to say they are qualified, but the large percentage would be qualified, and the few who would not be must suffer rather than that the great mass of these people should be kept in a bondage that prevents them from progressing and retards the progress of the community in which they live.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I can not support the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], even if it is not ruled out on a point of order. I think the point has not been pressed as yet. The amendment is too broad, too sweeping; it removes all restrictions, even from the full-blood Indians.

Mr. TILLMAN. It excepts the full bloods.

Mr. MONEY. No; it does not.

Mr. TILLMAN. It does not?

Mr. DUBOIS. It removes the restriction from the full-blood Indians.

From my observation, which, of course, is somewhat limited, there is not much difference between the full-blood Indians of the Indian Territory and the full-blood Indians of the Pacific slope. I have seen numbers of them this session.

They appeared before me as chairman of a subcommittee to urge some legislation. Of course there are exceptions. There are some very bright full-blood Indians in the Indian Territory, as there are on the western coast. But the full-blood Indians of the Indian Territory generally, in my judgment, are no more capable of taking care of their property than are our Indians on the coast. I think it would be a tremendous mistake for us to remove the restriction upon the alienation of their land, as is contemplated in this amendment.

I was sorry that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] made a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas. That restricted alienation. It was a compromise which was about as good as we can get, and it would have enabled these partly white Indians who are capable to dispose of their surplus land.

The criticism does not lie fairly against the committee that they have not fully and carefully considered the subject. The trouble is that the Senate would not agree to what the committees of both Houses thought wise in regard to these restrictions. The conditions in the Indian Territory among the Five Civilized Tribes are different from the conditions among other Indians. Those Indians are much more highly civilized. Only about 24,000 of the 90,000 are full bloods, and of the large number, three-fourths of the Indians, who are white there is a much higher order of civilization and education than among other Indians. The proportion of those who are able to take care of their property is much larger than it is among other Indians, and that class ought to be allowed to dispose of their property, and that was pretty well guarded, I believed, in the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. WARNER. Do I understand that the Senator from Idaho would support the amendment if full bloods were prohibited from selling; that is, that the mixed bloods are capable of transacting their own business?

Mr. DUBOIS. I would say to the Senator from Missouri that while I do not agree with the Senator from Wisconsin, I have a good deal of sympathy with his contention. I do not believe that all of the mixed bloods, by any manner of means, are capable of transacting their business. If we have the power to——

Mr. WARNER. Are all the white men of any State or city capable of attending to their own business?

Mr. DUBOIS. Oh, no; not at all. But there is a responsibility here which devolves upon us. I have in view also the white people of that section. I want to go as far as I can, but I would not willingly vote, and I never yet have been able to bring my mind to consent, to remove the restrictions absolutely from those Indians, whether they are mixed bloods or not; and I will not consent to remove the restrictions absolutely from the surplus lands of the full bloods. I think the amendment of the Senator from Kansas came as near satisfying the different views of the Senate as any that can be drawn, and I regret that the Senator from Mississippi raised the point of order against it. I think, I may add in passing, that it would have been satisfactory to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WARNER. It would have been entirely satisfactory to me, being a step in the right direction.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to inquire the parliamentary status of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the pending amendment. A point of order was raised by the Senator from Wisconsin, but afterwards withheld.

Mr. MONEY. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi proposes an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That all restrictions upon the alienation of lands of Indian allottees of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes, except Indians of full blood, are, except as to homesteads, hereby removed, to take effect July 1, 1906.

Mr. WARNER. If it be in order to accept the amendment, I will say that the amendment is entirely acceptable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri can accept the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator from North Dakota will excuse me, I should like to make one remark on the amendment I have just offered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I will not detain the Senate long.

Mr. President, I desire to say that the amendment I have offered I consider a sort of compromise of the matter as between those who are contending for supervision of Indian affairs and those who believe that all restrictions should be entirely removed. The amendment protects the Indians of full blood, and, on the other hand, it ought to content those who are of opinion that the mixed bloods and the white men there are just as competent as American citizens anywhere else.

As far as I am advised—and I do not pretend to any knowledge on this subject; I speak simply from information derived from very reliable sources within the Territory, from intelligent people, all of them, with whom I have had communication—this amendment will about meet their views as to what is best for the Territory. I do not see how the Indian or anybody else will be benefited by a compulsion to have his treasure remain undiscovered in the bowels of the earth, or how he is to improve his condition by a reservation of all he has, above his homestead, until some remote period when he will be gathered to his fathers, his children meantime growing up without enjoying the advantages which they would have had if he had been allowed to dispose of his surplus land at least.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have no objection to this amendment, I think. I would prefer that it be amended so as to exclude mineral and coal lands known at the time of sale to be such. While it is true that the coal and mineral lands which we have heretofore discussed have been those that have been reserved and are not in allotment whatever, still there may be other mineral lands and other oil lands there, and I would prefer to keep them intact and unsold for some little time, or at least until we can determine their character and value.

This amendment makes a distinction between the full-blood and the white Indian. I desire frankly to state that I have never regarded and do not now regard an individual having one-sixteenth or one-thirty-second part of Indian blood in his veins as being an Indian in fact. He is to all intents and purposes a white man. His association with the Indians, his living with the Indians, may possibly have given him some of their natural characteristics, if we may include laziness as among those characteristics.

But I am not particularly solicitous for the white man in the Indian Territory. There are about 24,000 full-blood Indians in the Indian Territory, if I have the figures correctly. There are about 90,000 white men called Indians. I have not the slightest objection to every white man in that Territory selling all of the land he has, and to removing restrictions entirely with respect to him. I do regard it as a moral and a sacred duty on the part of the Government of the United States to continue the existence of the red man or the Indian just as long as it can. We took his land from him without his consent. We obligated ourselves when we took that land to at least care for him. The only way to care for him is to care for him in a way in which he can live.

I do not agree with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] in the suggestion that the only way to legislate for the Indian is first to make him a pauper and then after he is made a pauper to let him develop the necessary character to make a white man. That has been our error through all our legislation—the folly of ever expecting to take a tribe of Indians, with their thousands and hundreds of thousands of years of inheritance, and make white men out of them, when the white men have an equal line of inheritance of an entirely different nature. If the Indians had been of that character so that they would develop when left to themselves, they would naturally, with all the vast opportunities there have been on this continent in the last thousand years, have grown and become a great people. The very fact that they have failed to do so in the face of these wonderful opportunities seems to be almost conclusive evidence of their inability to do so. If we will admit that basic truth in the first instance in dealing with our Indian population, we will rid ourselves of a good deal of this needless legislation.

The Indian to-day would have been a hundredfold better if he never had been brought in contact with white civilization, if he had been kept separate and allowed to live as was his wont to live. We have tried to impose our morals upon him; we have attempted to impose our ideals upon him, entirely foreign to his nature and foreign to his condition. It has never been a success. It never can be a success.

But we have a few of the full-blood Indians left. Let us protect those. Inasmuch as we have taken all the land from them so that they can no longer help themselves or live in the way they did a hundred or more years ago, let us protect them to the extent of our ability. We are not going to do it by still trying to make a white man out of him. One would have to argue with me, with my knowledge of the Indian, a great while before he would ever succeed in convincing me that the Indian is better off if he has no land and no property whatever. He may be a pauper, but in heaven's name, if he be, let us keep a little spot of 160 acres of this green earth between the two oceans that he can say is still the red man's land, on which he can build his own tepee, and in which he can protect himself from the elements, so that he will have at least that right—some little spot that is his own.

If we remove those restrictions absolutely, then in ten years the Indian will not own one foot of land upon the face of the earth, and he will be a wanderer. I call the attention of Senators on the committee to an appropriation we have made in this very bill to take care of vagabonds whose lands we had taken. There are remnants of several tribes in the State of California that we have had to support year after year, and finally we have an appropriation in this very bill to buy them land again. Yet, in the face of that provision in the bill, Senators are making the claim here that we must first pauperize the Indians by taking away all their lands. But when we have done that we must buy some more land for them and place them on it, as we have done in the State of California.

So far as this amendment is concerned, I shall vote for it, and I hope we will forever get rid of the white Indian as a ward of the Government. Then we can concentrate our energies toward taking care of the real red man.

Mr. President, I think that is all I can say except as to the little question of difference in the law as applied to those citizens in the Indian Territory. When we applied the Heff case, when we applied the Rickert case to the Indian status, we must remember that those cases were applied to Indians who had ceased their tribal relations. The law has declared that the tribal relations in the Indian Territory should continue. The Government has, therefore, its control over the tribal property, and with the control over the tribal property it may control its division and the extent in which any limitation may be imposed upon it. Therefore, as long as the title has not absolutely been divested from the Government, I am inclined to think that we can change or enlarge restrictions on its sale where the tribal relation still continues and where there has not been a complete adjustment, as there has not been in the Indian Territory. It is in process of adjustment, and even the allotment may possibly be changed or substituted under the present law. There we have 24,000 real Indians. I hope we will still attempt to protect the real Indian and by this amendment eliminate the white Indian from future legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that in addition to the exception of the full blood it might be well enough to except minors. Of course an Indian minor, no more than any other minor, can alienate his property; but under this provision an Indian minor, like any other minor, could make a deed, and that deed would be good unless disaffirmed within a reasonable time after he attains his majority.

I would like to see a direct prohibition against conveyance by Indian minors. Of course, as soon as the Indian minor attains his majority then the restrictions would be removed. I do not regard it as vital, but I believe it might serve a good purpose.

Mr. MONEY. Does the Senator mean as to the full bloods?

Mr. BAILEY. Of course the expression "full bloods" would include all full bloods, minors as well as others, and the exception which I would like to make would be the Indian minors not included under the description of full bloods.

Mr. MONEY. Mixed bloods.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. I would not like that amendment, although I would not be very obstinate about it, because I think the mixed blood minors would have such relation with their kindred that they would not be tempted as in the case of full bloods.

Mr. BAILEY. The truth is, as those of us who live right near that country know, that there are a few, and I say it to the credit of the white people there, a very few consciousless speculators there, and I believe that with the restrictions removed, and no disability except that of minority existing, it would be a safe prediction that advantage will be taken of the minors. I will not press it, but if it is entirely agreeable, I should like to see that exception made.

Mr. MONEY. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Texas state his proposed amendment to the amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. I think I can state it from the floor. After "full bloods" insert "and minors," if the Secretary will be good enough to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

That all restrictions upon the alienation of the lands of Indian allottees of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes, except Indians of full blood and minors, are, except as to homesteads, hereby removed to take effect July 1, 1906.

Mr. BAILEY. I think perhaps it would be a little more accurate to say, after "Indians of full blood," "and Indian minors." Of course we are dealing with Indians and that would be understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. If the amendment is going to be voted upon, I think the amendment ought to be made to it which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes to amend the amendment of the Senator from Missouri by adding what the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed to discontinue or in any respect affect the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior relative to any mineral lease or mineral leases heretofore executed by any allottee of said tribes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggested the amendment to the amendment without reflection as to the language of it, and while I think the expression as it stands is accurate enough, I believe it could be made more definite to say, "Indians under the age of 21 years." Of course minority is understood well in the law, and a minor is understood to be a person under 21 years old, but without being certain that there is any statute defining minority as applicable to those people I think it might be well enough to define it in the amendment. So, after "Indians of full blood," I suggest to insert "and Indians under 21 years of age," instead of the words I suggested a moment ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I believe an amendment was adopted to the bill—I was not present at the time—providing for an investigation to be prosecuted by the Secretary of the Interior with respect to coal lands in the Indian Territory. I will inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if I am right with respect to it?

Mr. CLAPP. There was an amendment appropriating $50,000. I think in justice to the Senator I ought to state that, as I recall it, it would apply to the segregated coal lands. I doubt whether in its present form—I am speaking now from memory—it would apply to an investigation beyond the segregated coal lands. The amendment is at the desk, however.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator had better have it read.

Mr. HALE. Let us dispose of this other matter first.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to have that amendment read.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri and the point of order raised upon it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order was withheld by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. The Chair was prepared to rule upon it, but the Senator from Colorado asked the Senator from Wisconsin to withhold his point of order, he desiring to address the Senate. The Senator from Wisconsin has not renewed his point of order. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri is pending.

Mr. HALE. Let us dispose of that before we go to any other amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed to discontinue or in any respect affect the supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior relative to any mineral lease or mineral leases heretofore executed by any allottee of said tribe.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin rise to this amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I rise to ask that the amendment adopted previously—I do not know what day it was when this bill was under consideration; I was not present—with respect to the investigation to be made by the Secretary of the Interior as to coal lands, may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator wish to have the pending amendment withheld?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir; I should like to have that amendment previously adopted reported first.

Mr. CLAPP. I think we can save time if I read it from the RECORD.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make further investigation of the character, extent, and value of the coal deposits in and under the segregated coal lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, Indian Territory; and in order that said investigation may be thoroughly practical and exhaustive the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

It would seem from this that the application of this appropriation was limited to the segregated coal lands.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I had been informed, Mr. President, that the amendment was broader. My information, with respect to the coal lands in Indian Territory that have been segregated, is that only those lands have been reserved in which the vein of coal shows at the surface. I am informed by the geologist who made the examination and surveys that this would in all probability not include all of the coal-bearing land in the Indian Territory; that coal underlies, beyond question, much of the land adjoining, where the coal does not appear on the surface, and under this amendment we are as likely to authorize the sale of lands that are coal lands and lands that are oil lands as well.

Such study as I have been able to make of this subject leads me to favor the policy of gradually educating the Indians to assume the responsibility of administering their own business affairs.

But it would seem to me the part of wisdom with respect to Indians not well advanced in civilization that their education should begin with a control of the proceeds of their lands. They should not be allowed to part with the title to their lands. If allowed to handle the proceeds, without being authorized to sell except under proper limitations, they will acquire business experience, and at the same time will be protected from the danger of improvidence and future need. I have understood that the Indians in the Indian Territory are, except as to the full bloods, in the main capable and progressive, but it seems to me they ought to have the aid and assistance of the Government when it comes to selling their land.

At the proper time, Mr. President, I should like to submit an amendment to the one pending providing that all sales shall be made under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment now would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, sir; I fancied it would be out of order at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can offer the amendment when the bill reaches the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as it would stand amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 7, insert:

That all restrictions upon the alienation of lands of Indian allottees of the Choctow, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole tribes, except Indians of full blood and Indians under 21 years of age, are, except as to homesteads, hereby removed, to take effect July 1, 1906: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be held or construed
